A Muslim State in Bosnia: No Easy Path to Peace

By Joseph Fitchett

erior Com July b

International Herald Tribune PARIS - A Muslim-governed state in Europe seems likely to emerge from the war in Bosnia, U.S. and European officials said Friday, explaining that partition plans were under active discussion now that the Vance-Owen peace plan has been abandoned.

The idea of a separate state for Muslims, they said, offered no automatic solutions to the conflict in Bosnia and did not preclude a need for Western military involvement there.

Party Rebellion Strengthens After Miyazawa's Defeat

LDP Split Would Raise Prospect Of Coalition After July Elections

By David E. Sanger New York Times Service

TOKYO - Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa was forced to dissolve the parliament on Friday night and deciare elections for next month after a sturning rebellion by younger legislators in his own party, who joined forces with the opposition and overwhelmingly passed a no-confidence vote in the government.

Political analysts said that the election could well bring about the end of nearly four decades of one-party rule in Japan.

The organizers of the rebellion, which turned on the question of how to reform Japan's scandal-plagued government, appeared to be preparing Friday night to split off from the roling Liberal Democratic Party.

That raised the prospect of a coalition government, and perhaps a fundamental reorganization of the political order that has ruled over Japan since the creation of the conservative roling party in 1955.

But whatever the outcome, the deep rifts that led to the public humiliation on Friday of Mr. Miyazawa, 73, seem almost certain to doom his premiership. It also easts the country into embarrassing political turmoil just three weeks before the leaders of the Group of Seven major industrialized countries arrive here for their annual summit meeting.

Japanese leaders insisted that the summit meeting and the simultaneous visit by President Boris N. Yeltsin of Russia would go forward without a hitch, even in the midst of what promises to be one of the most critical and hard-fought parliamentary campaigns of postwar Japanese history.

But the battling seems certain to leave the overnment virtually paralyzed, dashing any ope that Japan would use its role as chairma of the annual gathering to provide leadership on a host of critical issues, from stimulating the global economy to bringing global trade-liber-alization talks to a quick conclusion.

Because the long-simmering generational hattles that careened out of control on Friday pit leaders of Japan's conservative establishment against each other, no one expects major changes in either domestic or foreign policy.

Nonetheless, American officials said they expected that U.S.-Japanese negotiations over the Clinton administration's new "framework" for closing Japan's ballooning trade surpluses, and other talks requiring major political decisions, would likely grind to a halt for several months. "The president might as well leave his trade files at home," a senior American official said

Japan's upheaval could jeopardize important trade talks with the United States. Page 9.

Friday night, "because it is not even clear who he should be talking to."

Indeed, for a generation, Japan's allies and trading partners have geared their strategies to the assumption that the party that has held a grip on power for 38 years would be the only political force that mattered in Japanese polines. Now, that assumption seems shattered, and diplomats scrambled Friday night to cable their capitals with speculation about how the prospect of a coalition government in Japan could ripple through their own economies.

Opposition politicians celebrated the moment with cheers of "Banzai!" on the floor of the parliament.

"It's like the Berlin Wall coming down for Japan," said Morihiro Hosokawa, who last year created a pro-reform group called the Japan New Party, which is widely expected to win 30 or more seats in the coming election.
No-confidence resolutions have only been approved three times in the Diet since the end World War II, and only once since the Liberal Democrats took control. The last time was in 1980, when Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira was forced to dissolve the parliament. He died in the middle of the campaign several weeks later, and a sympathy vote once again swept the Liberal Democrats to power.

But sympathy for the party is in far shorter public supply now, and history seems of little use in predicting how the political landscape

Dollar Stages Bonn Angrily Rebuffs U.S. Charge It Provoked Yugoslav Crisis Rally Against Mark and Yen

Compiled by Our Staff From Disposches NEW YORK — The dollar soared against major currencies Priday, rallying against the len after the no-confidence vote against Prime Minister Krichi Miyazawa and surging to a 15-month high against the Dentsche mark.

"This is the big move in the dollar that we have been waiting for all year," said David Wilson, a dealer at GiroCredit Bank. "The dollar just roared through the 1993 and 1992 highs against the mark almost without pausing

The dollar hit 1.6860 DM, the highest level since March 20, 1992, before slipping a little to close Friday at 1.6810 DM, up more than 2 pfennig from Thursday's level of 1.6594. The 1J.S. currency rose more than 2 year to 109.750 yen from 107.275 on Thursday.

"Everything is living up for the dollar all of a sudden," said Earl Johnson, foreign-exchange adviser at Harris Trust & Savings Bank in Chicago. The U.S. economy has shown imper than the mark or the yen, he said. The dollar rose 3.3 percent against the mark this week as concern about Germany's weak economy weighed on the country's carrency.

Dealers said the dollar also was boosted by remarks by Wayne Angell, a Federal Reserve Board governor. He said that inflation was still too high and that he expected growth in gross domestic product this year to be nearer 4 per-cent than the previously expected 2.5 percent. Such comments raise the possibility in inves-tors' minds that the Fed may raise short-term.

interest rates to rein in inflation.

Traders damped yen after legislators voted against Mr. Miyazawa for failing to pursue a cleanup of Japan's political system. Mr. Miyazawa's Liberal Democratic Party has held power since 1955, and jutters about its defeat were enough to send the yen tumbling.
"People are actively selling yen now," said

VENICE - About 5,000 ants on display at the Venice Riennale, one of the world's leading art exhibitions, have been freed after protests by animal rights activists, a spokeswoman said Friday.

The insects were housed in plastic tubes and transparent boxes in a design by a Japanese artist, Yukinori Yanagi. The exhibit was completed by colored sand depicting flags and was part of a section titled "Can Art Change the World?"

The work angered laisan animal rights groups, which started legal action against the Biennale. The spokeswoman said Mr. Yanagi freed the ants himself. "I think he found an area of the gardens at the exhibition site where they would go largely unnoticed,"

Quayle Sets a New Standard, Sort of, for Museums

By Maureen Dowd New York Tomes Service

HUNTINGTON, Indiana - Clarisa, an artist with a mass of raven black hair and only one name - "just like Cher" drove all the way from Milwankee with her 3-D laminated brass portrait of Dan Quayle.

She hoped to contribute the work, showing Mr. Quayle climbing the stairway of politics, with a cross in the background, to The Dan Quayle Center and Museum, which opened in the former vice president's hometown Thursday.

She had, after all, sent one of her brassy portraits, with "Lz" emblazomed on it, to Elizabeth Taylor for the star's 60th birthday and received a thank-you note in return.

But Thomas Mehl, curator of the first vice presidential mission to honor a living person, refused to help Clarisa carry it in, apparently not considering it right for his exhibit, "Huntington to Washington — the Dan Quayle Trail."

"We have the cream of the cream here." Mr. Mehl, a 31-yearold graduate student, said as he looked around proudly at glass one grammane student, said as he nonceu around promoty at glass cases displaying such Quayle collectibles as his high-school letter sweater (with a golf beg insignia); a red, white and hue golf bag from his Senate days; baby pictures; his fifth-grade report eard, which showed he was once considered a pretty good speller, his uniform for the Huntington Kiwanis Little League team; a small red sweatshirt with his mother's handsewn "Danny" on the front; a car registration for a 1977 vellow Plymouth; the Quayles' wedding announcement in the Hun-tington Herald-Press, and Quayle's law degree with the bottom chewed off by the family dog, Barnaby, who is shown in an accompanying snapshot looking not at all repentant.

Among the people who are flabbergasted at the idea of the museum is Paul Light, a professor at the Humphrey Institute at the University of Minnesota who is an expert on the vice

"To begin with," he said, "even for a vice presiden: who was not as under-utilized or under-prepared as Dan Quayle, it takes a fair amount of hubris to have a museum named in occ's honor while one is alive."

Pointing out that Hubert H. Humphrey and Walter Mondale did not have their own museums - and neither did most vice presidents through history - he added: "Certainly, it does set a new standard for the creation of muscoms. If Dan Quayle can have one, I shudder to think of all the politicians in Washington and in state capitals who will Quayle boosters in Huntington are hoping that with so much carping about the new Clinton administration, the time might be ripe for some nostalgia about the Quayle years.

As William Kristol, a conservative analyst in Washington who was Mr. Quayle's chief of staff (but just could not make it to Huntington for the opening), wryly notes: "If Clinton keeps going in this direction, people will want a John Sunun Museum and a Sam Skinner Museum in a couple of years."

One of the first visitors Thursday to the brick building that was once a Christian Science church was Gene Snowden, the Republican mayor of Huntington, resplendent in white jacket, red pants, white shoes and American flag tie.

He was certain the museum would be a success, judging from the attention Mr. Quayle attracted last year when he visited a dentist in town.

"Two thousand people crowded around to see him while he was getting his teeth fixed," the mayor said.

PARIS - As the French political debate over immigration and rising unemployment grows more heated, subsidiaries of foreign companies in France are finding it increasingly difficult to import help from home.

Lawyers who specialize in obtaining work permits for expatriate employees say their cli-cuts are facing greater scrutiny — and in some cases denials - on applications that would have sailed through in recent years. The lawyers blame local and regional labor officials, who, they say, are responding to un-employment now running at almost 11 percent, with a sharp increase of white-collar workers joining the jobless ranks over the past year.

They also believe that local officials have been influenced by the tone of the public debate on illegal immigration, which Interior Minister Charles Pasqua recently said he wished to reduce to zero. The deepening acrimony over immigration in France mirrors that of Germany and elsewhere in Europe as jobless rolls grow amid deepening economic gloom, bringing demands that immigrant workers be barred. The National Assembly on Friday overwhelmingly approved a tough immigration law that would make it harder for foreigners to acquire French citizenship through marriage and to bring over family members, The Associated Press reported. It goes on to the Senate, which is also expected to approve.

[One of France's longest traditions, granting political asylum to persecuted dissidents, will pass from the control of the Foreign Ministry to the Interior Ministry, meaning the police. The assembly already had approved a separate proposal making it easier for the police to conduct spot identity checks.] "They've become extremely demanding,"

Stephane Halimi, a Paris attorney with Deloitte Toache, which processes over 300 permit requests a year, said of local officials. "We haven't been refused up to now, but I wouldn't be surprised if it happened."

Joseline Heritier, a Paris lawyer, said: "I don't believe the government has any intention to restrict large foreign companies from bringing in expatriate employees. But unfortunately the permit requests must be made at the departmental level, and there we have seen a more restrictive policy over the past few weeks. ## Rivals Agree On Dividing Ministries in Cambodia

PHNOM PENH — The leaders of Cambodia's two main parties reached agreement on Friday on how to share power in an interim administration until a constitution can be written, a government spokesman said.

"It was very good, very good," said Prime Minister Hun Sen after leaving a meeting with his rival through civil war and a bitter election campaign, Prince Norodom Sok An, a spokesman for Mr. Hun Sen's ruling Cambodian People's Party, said the power-sharing accord was "historic.

Prince Norodom Sihanouk, Prince Ranariddh's father and head of state, will serve as the commander in chief of the armed forces during the period of up to three months it will take the newly elected National Assembly to write a constitution.

They agreed in principle the question of setting up the minis-tries of Defense and Interior," the spokesman said

He said problems regarding other key portfolios had been solved. Officials of Prince Ranariddh's Funcinpec said they agreed with Mr. Sok An's report and saw no major difficulties in bringing about the transitional government. Funcinpec is the French acronym for United National Front for an Independent, Neutral, Peaceful and Cooperative Cambodia, which advocates giving strong executive powers to Prince Sihanouk.

The two leaders were working under pressure from Prince Sihanouk, who said Friday that failure to create an interim government would play into the hands of the Khmer Rouge. The Khmer Rouge, although having signed the 1991 accords ending Cambodia's civil war, turned its back on the elections.

"Right now we are in a serious situation." Prince Sihanouk told diplomats earlier Friday, warning of the imminent collapse of a plan to form a interim government with nia's post-Soviet constitution, Prince Ranariddh and Mr. Hun

Sen as co-chairmen. The diplomats, representing the five permanent members of the UN Security Council and other interested countries, have been discussing ways of financing the transitional period. Prince Sihanouk said the UN Transitional Authority in Cambodia, which has supervised a fragile cease-fire for 16 months and ran last month's election, might have to extend its stay into October.

The UN forces had been scheduled to leave three months after the election, which ended on May 28. Mr. Hun Sen and Prince Ranariddh agreed Wednesday to serve as co-chairman of an interim administration, but by Thursday a conflict had developed over the distribution of important ministries.

The United Nations, which has already spent well over $2 billion, may be forced to stay on because Prince Sihanouk said his wife. Princess Monique, foresaw that August would be an inauspicious month to proclaim a new government.

While he is on vacation during July and August, Prince Sihanouk is leaving instructions for the National Assembly to make Cambodia a Western-style democracy that respects human rights, free enterprise and freedom of the press.

U.S. Says Somali Warlord Is Neutralized

Washington Post Service
MOGADISHU, Somalia — Military officials from the United States and the United Nations said Friday that the offensive on a Somali warlord's enclave had succeeded in smashing the warlord's militia and removing the greatest single obstacle to peace and security in the capital.

But the target of the UN attack, General Mohammed Farrah Aidid, remained at large, and UN officials seemed ambivalent at best about how seriously they intend to pursue him.

Jonathan T. Howe, a retired U.S. Navy admiral who is the chief UN envoy in Somalia, said he had ordered the UN military commanders to hunt for the fugitive warlord only as long as the search did not distract from their primary job of escorting food convoys and securing relief

"I don't think that General Aidid's activities should take away from the rest of the efforts we have in the country," Mr. Howe said Friday.

But with General Aidid's headquarters smashed and his militia infrastructure in apparent disarray, it was unclear how eager UN officials were to capture him, given the com-plexity of trying him in a country with no functioning courts or legal system.

In the UN operation Thursday, five UN peacekeepers were killed, and 46 wounded.

There were scores of Somali casualties, according to Somali witnesses and hospital records. Military officials also explained why they had opened fire on one of the capital's largest hospitals, which contained more than 500 patients, U.S. and UN officials said they decided to open fire after General Aidid's militiamen had sheltered inside and had fired on UN peacekeepers using the patients as human

Democrats Seek Cut in Spy Budget

By Douglas Jehl

New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — Defying stem warnings from the Christon administration, Democrats in Congress are preparing to cut more than $1 billion from a White House intelligence budget request.
The expected cuts would leave the nation's intelligence agencies with only about as much money for next year as they were given by Congress this year. President Bill Clinton had asked for an increase that would have outpaced inflation, contending that the national security requirements era justify the steeper rise.

The Democratic lawmakers have generally agreed that intelligence programs provide cost-effective insurance against surprises in an un-predictable world. But in tunning aside Mr. Clinton's request, they have argued that the agencies must share some of the budget-cutting burden being borne by the military.

While the size of the nation's stelligence budget remains a se-ciet, officials say the White House would bring it to well over $28

The cuts being endorsed by influential Democratic Iswmakers would slash at least $500 million from each of the two proposed budgets that comprise the overall intelligence program.

A clear indicator of that congress

sional sentiment occurred late Thursday, government officials said, when the House Intelligence Committee voted to cut about $1.2 billion from the White House request on the two budgets — the National Foreign Intelligence Budget, which provides for the opera-sions of the Central Intelligence Agency and other spy agencies, and the budget for Tactical Intelligence and Related Activities, which are run primarily by the military.

The final budgets voted on by Congress remain to be shaped by four more congressional committees, which are not due to vote on the issue until next month at the earliest. But the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence is also on track to cut the administration request, and the House and Senate appropriations committees are likely to recommend even deeper

The Democratic-led defiance comes despite strong warnings from R James Woolsey Jr., who as director of central intelligence has served as chief lobbyist for the administration's request. Congressional officials have said that he has contended that cuts below the administration's request could have "devastating consequences" on the ability of U.S. intelligence agencies to monitor developments around the world and to assess their signifi-

Republicars praised Mr. Clinton's performance but discuted his facts.

Representative Richard K. Armey, Republican of Texas, the budget spokesman for House Republicans, said. "He makes a good presentation, and you hear him say things that sound real good." But, he said, government spending would increase 20 percent over five years and most of the spending cuts the president is touting will occur not this year but two years from now — if then.

Mr. Clinton, he said, "is trying to put a happy face" on a program that increases taxes too much and cuts spending too little.

Mr. Camon appeared cheerful and at ease facing several hundred White House reporters that he and many of his aides had come to see as too adversarial. But in his new media-cutreach mode, Mr. Clinton paused to admire the Mickey Mouse tie a Reuters reporter, Gene Gibbons, was wearing and then offered a Jeffersonian defense of the free press doing its job. The president returned to the East Room afterwards to chat with the press and to don the tie, given to him by Mr. Gippens.

The news conference was part of a burst of media appearances in which the president has promoted himself and his policies and claimed that improvements on a variety of economic fronts were a result of

Prime Time for Clinton? Network Negativism

WASHINGTON — After weeks of awkward stambles and generally bad news, President Bill Clinton bit a run of good luck this week that was timed so propitiously that his advisers decided that the president was ready for prime time.

But two of the three broadcast networks decided otherwise.
White House officials did not hide their frustration at ABC and CBS on Thursday night for not broadcasting Mr. Clinton's first evening news conference. Some were assonished that the big public relations blitz they planned could be so firmly set aside in favor of the beginning of summer reruns.

"Put me down as very surprised and disappointed," said David R. Gergen, the counselor to the president who was recruited to fix White House communications. "We have informed all of the broadcast networks of the coverage other presidents have received. Apparently they have changed their standards. They're applying new standards to this president."

'CNN, the 24-hour news cable channel, continued its practice of prosideasting most presideatist events, and NBC broadcast the first part of the news conference, but cut it off after the first 30 minutes. "They're in the entertainment business," Ed Turner, a CNN vice president, said of the other networks. "We're in the news business. For us this is a news story."

While the court stopped short of declaring a constitutional right to a smoke-free prison, the 7-to-2 decision offered a notably generous interpretation of the Eighth Amendment's prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment. ## Cambodia: Toward Success bodia is on the way to becoming a UN success. Confusion about the fallout of last month's UN-supervised elections has denied the operation much of the credit it is due.

There was nasty violence in the cam-paign, but not much of it. Almost everyone voted. The United Nations found the process free and fair. And the good guys won — the royalist opposition party led by Prince Ranariddh. "Good" because they are not Communists and because they won in the name of the prince's father, Prince Sihanouk, who is maddeningly changeable but who is also the one leader with a chance to bring together most of his countrymen and to co-opt the still-dangerous Khmer Rouge. Suppose the other major party, the ruling Communist party of the former Khmer Rouge guerrilla Hun Sen, had won: Civil war between this Vietnam-seated party and the profoundly anti-Vietnam Khmer Rouge would have been inevitable.

The postelectoral sorting out in Phnom Penh has been disorderly and tense. But the essence of it is that the two major parties, having submitted themselves to electoral test, accepted the result. The elected assem-bly in its first act granted Prince Sihanouk Cambodia is commonly cited as a leading case in the general bemoaning of United Nations peacekeeping initiatives. But Camtwo parties' leaders "co-chairmen" of an interim coalition government. It is a problematic combination. But a winner-take-all result would have perilously alienated the number two party. And the Khmer Rouge are out there alone in left field.

The United Nations operation has involved more than 20,000 personnel and cost more than $2 billion. For all of its disappointments, it has accomplished the large tasks of ending the proxy civil war (Khmer Rouge fighting for China, Hun Sen fighting for Vietnam), taking Cambodia into temporary UN receivership and creating a striking new democratic politi-cal process. The UN could do one more short-term service before its mandate expires in August: Pick up the $9 million-amonth payroll of Cambodia's soldiers and police to keep them in a good humor. Then the UN can start to fall back into a normal and continuing development role.

Australia hatched this operation. Japan's Yasushi Akashi has earned respect for run-ning it. It is not just a diplomatic exercise but an act of international conscience to redeem a country that suffered unspeakable genocidal losses less than 20 years ago.

It's Still a Sound Tax Bill

Most of the changes the Democrats on the Senate Finance Committee made in President Bill Clinton's economic plan were for the worse, but most were also around the margins. The strong main outlines of the president's plan were preserved. The tax increases and spending cuts still add up; the substantial deficit reduction that he proposed would be achieved, and the principal means of achieving it would remain progressive — higher top-income tax rates.

These were never in doubt; perhaps that is a measure of the president's achievement. The burden was also spread as it ought to be across the entire budget, so that even Social Security beneficiaries would pay. The president's proposal to subject a larger share of Social Security benefits to the income tax was largely preserved.

What the Finance Committee mainly did was yield to the manufacturing and other business groups that, yes, want the deficit down but, no, did not want to pay the broadbased energy tax the president proposed. The committee turned that essentially into a small gasoline tax increase, giving up not just a lot of revenue but a modest deterrent to energy consumption in the process.

To make up the revenue loss, the committee killed some business tax breaks the House had approved at the president's behest in the name of spurring investment. No one should weep for those. The Senate bill would also cut Medicare more than the president proposed and reduce some aid he included for the poor (in part to offset the energy tax now out of the bill). The Medicare cuts are said to be aimed at providers who will likely try to shift the cost to the privately insured; instead of an energy tax, the burden will be borne in part in the form of higher health insurance premiums. If you are a senator, of course, better to have the insurance industry levy a tax than to have the Senate do it any day.

The debate in the Finance Committee started out in lofty terms. The troublesome oil-state Democrats - David Boren, John Breaux - weren't trying simply to kill an energy tax that happened to be particularly unpopular in their states. They were trying to help their president and their party regain the political center by changing the mix in the president's plan between tax increases and spending cuts. But that was before the messy brawl broke out, which, in the Finance Committee, is always over the same question: Who pays?

The panel shifted the burden at least in part from energy consumption to health-care consumption and from energy users to the poor. One of the partial casualties was the full increase that the president proposed in the earned-income tax credit that serves as a wage-extender for the working poor. He asked that the credit be increased as a first step toward his vision of welfare reform, which includes the notion not just of requiring work but of rewarding it; the idea is that no child of a full-time, year-round worker should be poor. His proposal was cut by more than a third; on the floor or in conference, some of the cut should be restored.

But on balance this remains a progressive and fiscally responsible bill. Mr. Clinton has asked the congressional Democrats to cast some hard votes, and so far on the question of the deficit they continue to cast them. He is winning.

Haiti: Brazil Doesn't Help

U.S. Navy and Coast Guard ve its coasts. It has barely six weeks' oil supply on hand. The worldwide oil embargo voted by the UN Security Council on Wednesday should have marked the beginning of the end for Haiti's military regime.

But at the last minute Brazil got squeamish. The Security Council flinched from authorizing those vessels to enforce the embargo. The likely results: more unnecessary weeks of suffering for the Haitian people. and a weakening of Brazil's own claim to a permanent Security Council seat.

Even in its diluted form, the Security Council resolution, which takes effect Wednesday, is important and welcome. Until now, the only economic pressure behind diplomatic efforts to restore Hairian democracy was a highly porous Western Hemisphere embargo.

That only made life harder for Haiti's destitute peasants and slum dwellers, but failed to stop luxury imports to the wealthy supporters of the military regime. And it had no effect at all on the tanker traffic between Europe and Haiti.

If it can stop the flow of oil, the council's resolution will immobilize the army's trucks, planes and tanks, along with the cars and boats of the elite. The resolution also usefully bans arms shir freezes Haitian assets abroad. But the removal of the naval enforcement provision invites evasions, even though countries violating it now face punishment themselves. Brazil's action, supported by Venezuela, reflects a longstanding Latin American concern about outsiders, particularly the United States, intervening in domestic political issues. But in this case, the intervener is the United Nations and the domestic political issue is the destruction of democracy by military force. What of Latin America's own commitment at Santiago two years ago to defend the hemisphere's democratic regimes? And what of Brazil's claim to be a serious world power deserving a permanent seat on the Security Council? The council is often asked to authorize the use of international force, sometimes over such internal political questions as starvation and banditry in Somalia or potential genocide in Iraq. Should Brazil be expected to water down all such resolutions?

Bad enough that Brazil embarrasses its own diplomacy. Far worse that it prolongs the agony of Haitians who have already suffered far too long.

Healthy—and Wise

Dietary supplements represent a $4 bil-lion-a-year industry in the United States, but a regulatory loophole leaves consumers relying largely on faith when it comes to judging their purity, potency and the health claims made for them. The Food and Drug Administration rightly wants to close that loophole by applying the same standards to vitamins and other supplements that are now applied to food. That has the supplement makers crying foul.

But the FDA does not intend to limit access to vitamins and minerals. It does seek to allow health claims to be made for the supplements only when there is "significant scientific agreement" that they are valid. Right now only calcium supplements to deter osteoporosis meet that standard, though next month the FDA will act to allow claims that folic acid benefits women of childbearing age.

"Significant scientific agreement" is not as lofty a requirement as compelling scientific proof, but it demands more than just suggestive evidence. Vitamins C and E and beta carotene, for example, may contribute to preventing certain cancers, heart disease and other conditions. Is the area of scientific agreement on that possibility broad enough to warrant such claims? The FDA will probably decide soon. The important thing is it will decide on the basis of what accepted studies show, not just on what is suspected.

OPINION

The Allies Should Get Used to the New Isolationism

P ARIS—There is a persistent demand to know what is the Clinton administration's foreign policy. This becomes another question: Is there a Clinton administration foreign policy? There is an aggressive trade policy. As for foreign policy, one exists — but by default. The administration's foreign policy is being shaped by the unconscious factors that have always dominated U.S. relations with the rest of the world.

American policy has always reflected the contest between a universalizing idealism connected with the Puritan origins of the nation, as the secular realization of God's kingdom, and a related desire to withdraw from a corrupted and corrupting world, into the security of national self-sufficiency on an isolated continent. The only times Americans have emerged from national isolation—and the mentality of isolation—ism—have been when the country seemed threatemed in one or both of these respects, either its physical security in jeopardy, or its sense of national moral primacy and mission defied. From the 1950s to the 1980s it seemed menaced on both counts.

The first departure from isolation was in 1898, under the influence of the imperial enthusiasms and social Darwinism of the period, and the country's domestic Protestant progressivism. Cubans were struggling to throw off Catholic and reactionary Spain's imperialism, so it proved both opportune and morally satisfying to take Cuba over, and Puerto Rico and the Philippines as well, all in the cause of progress, uplift and manifest destiny.

It happened again in 1916, but only after a considerable and successful effort (by the British propaganda services, among others) to identify the kaiser and German militarism with evil. That double descendant of Presbyterian ministers, Wood-row Wilson, became convinced that the United States could win the war to end wars and provide the world with a new order; but popular enthusiasm for this rapidly waned.

It happened in 1941, because the United States

Today there is no physical threat to the security of the United States. Such threat as exists is to the country's economic well-being and comes from

There is no great idealistic motivation today for international involvement. American feelings are rightly but ephemerally engaged by human suffer-ing in Somalia, Ethiopia or Bosnia, but these are affairs whose causes are indigenous and seemingly beyond the ability of others to much influence. There certainly is no great crusading answer to African misery and anarchy or to Balkan hatreds.

The Clinton administration maintains and man-ages the international obligations already in place, with a bias toward their reduction. Budget and riskassessment both dictate the run-down of overseas bases and foreign commitments. The administration offers an increased emphasis on human rights and environmental issues as its contribution to foreign policy, but this usually yields when it meets practical obstacles, as in Mr. Clinton's decision not to withdraw most-favored-nation trade status from China because of its rights abuses.

The administration seems more interested in Russia and the other Soviet successor states and China than in what happens elsewhere. This is rationalized the West European powers. NATO is taken for granted, but excites little interest. It seems unlikely that this administration would undertake any serious new initiatives in Asia, even if there were new conflicts there. The United States will play a coop-erative role alongside its allies and would like this to be thought the leader's role. But as Washington will not pay a serious price, either in men or money, in order to lead, this is a convention that will endure only so long as the allied governments find it convenient.

The Clinton administration remains willing to use force, as it has done in Somalia and in enforcing Iraqi airspace restrictions, but only so long as American forces enjoy an overwhelming power advantage and the risks are negligible. In this respect it is the prisoner of the military services and their new doctrine of decisive force and minimum risk. No one in Mr. Clinton's entourage really wants to challenge that doctrine.

The question, then, is where this leaves America's allies. Present evidence is that it leaves them in anxiety and disorder. The European allies and Japan have been the United States' lieutenants for four decades - occasionally insubordinate lieutenants, as in the French case, or resentful ones,

They now have been handed independent command. They are greatly upset by this, even incredulous, thinking it cannot really be happening. But I think that if they look at American history they will understand that it is happening. So they would do well to think seriously about what they are going to do about it.

Clinton is making the first senious effort in years. But his proposal is being nibbled to death by ducks. Its fate illustrates what has gone wrong with the system. The Clinton plan relied heavily on a new energy tax. Lobbyists for big energy users savaged that proposal, and senators from oil states killed it.

Instead the Senate Finance Committee put in a derisorily small gasoline tax increase and, to save money, called for big cuts in Medicare. Does anyone really think that those cuts will survive the certain onslaught by the elderly lobby?

In other words, it is hard to change because important interests want to keep the advantages they have. We live in a world of mutual vetoes. Most of the time, mertia wins.

Loss of the energy tax is particularly painful. American energy prices are the lowest in the industrial world. In real terms, taking account of inflation, they are 30 percent lower than they were 10 years ago. The result is to make us profligate users of energy, damning the environment and making us dangerously dependent on Middle East oil.

"The neutering of Bill Clinton's energy tax would be a huge opportunity missed," The Economist of London said last week. Since then it has effectively been neutered.

Why has the resistance to change that the framers built into the U.S. Constitution become so much great er, and more serious?

First, the federal government is far more important than James Madison & Co. ever imagined, with huge powers over the national economy and individuals' share. It follows that interest groups will fight more ten-ciously over its policy.

Second, modern communications have inflated the egos, and independence, of members of Congress. They are less likely to cooperate with their leadership or the president when they can go on television and take a stance as protectors of local interests.

Third, the president nowadays has no respite from the press. The age of deference is past. Reporters are all over him all the time.

In those circumstances we are ded romantics if we think a president can just use his bully pulpit to see that the nation's problems are solved. Bill Clinton has made mistakes.

But the problems are deep, and any president who is serious about ad-dressing them would find it desperately hard to make things change.

I erred in a recent column (IHT, June 8) when I said that Pre Clinton had asked Mayor Richard Daley of Chicago to be secretary of transportation and then withdrawn the offer. The offer, made and withdrawn, was to the mayor's brother, William Daley, a banker and lawyer.

U.S. to Widen UN Peace Role

New Rules Would Ease Troop Participation

By R. Jeffrey Smith and Julia Preston

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration is drafting a new set of criteria for U.S. involvement in United Nations peacekeeping operations that would provide for a much wider role for American military personnel, according to senior defense and diplomatic

Under the new criteria, the officials said, U.S. forces could help plan, train and participate in UN peace-keeping activities when justified by general U.S. inter-ests, not just when the United States could make a "unique" contribution.

The plan also calls for a substantial beefing up of the peacekeeping staff at UN headquarters in New York. U.S. forces, in turn, would be more inclined to accept greater UN authority over the peacekeeping operations that involve them.

The aim of the plan is partly to demonstrate a U.S. commitment to using military force in concert with other nations rather than unilaterally, an approach adubbed "assertive multilateralism" by Madeleine K. Albright, U.S. chief delegate to the United Nations. It is also meant to strengthen the ability of the United Nations to conduct military operations successfully in strife-torn areas, the officials said.

The plan represents what one official termed an "svolutionary rather than revolutionary" shift from existing policy. Officials said one factor that has helped block a significant U.S. military role in such UN peacekeeping operations as Cambodia, Lebanon, Kashmir and Cyprus is a requirement that U.S. forces he able to make a special consideration. be able to make a special contribution.

Under the proposed criteria, articulated in classified drafts of a White House policy review document known as PRD-13, the United States could take part if such action would catalyze involvement by other nations or more generally advance U.S. interests, the officials said. The degree of involvement would be determined by such factors as the intensity of public support and the risk of any U.S. commitment becoming open-ended.

Officials said PRD-13 had not yet been presented to President Bill Clinton, but general agreement has been reached on these points among senior officials at the State Department, Defense Department and Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The U.S. chief delegate outlined some of the proposed new features in a speech a week ago to the Council on Foreign Relations in New York, saying that the administration had decided "the time has come to commit the political, intellectual and financial ## capital that UN peacekeeping and our security The plan would constitute an official U.S. endorsement of many of the ambitious ideas suggested last year by UN Secretary-General Bource Buttres Ghali in his report on the UN's role in the post-Cold War era, entitled "Agenda for Peace." Aithough the U.S. plan has not yet been presented in detail to the UN leadership, top peacekeeping officials aware of the plan's general outline said in interviews they welcomed Washington's shift.

UN officials acknowledged they sorely need the kind of political and logistical boost the United States is offering. UN peacekeeping operations are growing exponentially, straining the infrastructure, experience and planning capabilities at UN headquarters.

By the end of this month, the United Nations will have about 90,000 troops in 13 operations around the world. Yet the entire force depends upon a staff of 35 ilitary advisers and about 40 civilians in New York. "If I had to choose a single word to evoke the problems of UN peacekeeping, it would be 'improvi-sation,' "Mrs. Albright said. "A kind of programmed amateurism shows up across the board," including what she described as "the near total absence" of contingency planning, "hastily recruited, ill-equipped and often unprepared troops and civilian staff," the absence of centralized military command and central absence of centralized military command and control and "the lack of a durable financial basis for starting and sustaining peacekeeping operations."

These and other problems have made U.S. military leaders reductant to commit U.S. forces to peacekeeping operations, particularly under UN command. The former head of UN forces in Sarajevo, Major General Lewis MacKenzie of Canada, vividly described the insufficient staff problem last year. "Do not get into trouble as a commander in the field after 5 P.M. New York time, or Saturday and Sunday," he said. "There is no one to answer the phone."

Currently, only the three biggest operations — in Somalia, Cambodia and the former Yugoslav republics — have officers stationed in the UN Situation Room round the clock. The U.S. plan calls for reorganization of the UN peace-keeping staff, including the creation of an operations headquarters modeled after the Pentagon's 24-hour command center.

Officials said that in the course of the review of policy toward UN peacekeeping, U.S. military leaders had dropped traditional insistence that U.S. forces be kept under U.S. command. The Joint Chiefs of Staff agreed to take a case-by-case approach and place U.S. vo radio said the Serbian-Muslim troops under UN or allied command whenever they find the particular arrangements acceptable, officials en quiet, allowing an exchange of said.

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — The latest in a long line of Bosman cease-fires failed to take hold Friday, and a Canadian peacekeeping soldier was killed shortly after the guns were supposed to fall silent. The soldier died when an anti-tank shell slammed into his armored vehicle soon after the latest truce was due to come into effect. There were no signs that the truce would be more effective than its many predecessors, although fighting did subside on some fronts in Bosnia's three-sided civil war. The cease-fire had been agreed on Tuesday by the commanders of the rival Muslim, Croatian and Scr-Scores of earlier truces have been

A Canadian U.S. Inches Toward Accepting Partition

By Thomas L. Friedman New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - President Bill Cinton has signaled that the United States raight accept a partition of Bosnia that would allow the Serbs to keep land they seized by force provided that all Bosnian Muslims and Croats agreed to such a plan.

Mr. Clinton, speaking Thursday in the East Room of the White House at his first evening news conference, said he still preferred a "mul-

The Clinton administration has said up untilnew that it would never endorse such an alteration of internationally recognized borders by force. But U.S. officials now acknowledge that such partition is probably the only practical solution.

In his opening statement, Mr. Clinton listed a series of what he called successes for his administration, emphasizing the recent military action in Somalia and the progress of his bud-

With the first question, however, he had to shift from a focus on areas of progress to the thornier topic of the war in Bosnia. Asked about the Croatian-Serbian plan to carve Bosnia into three ethnic states, Mr. Clinton acknowledged that the plan would grant to Serbia territory captured by force. The crisis in the region, he said, "has not been resolved in the way I would have hoped." But he said the reward to Serbia reflected the inadequacy of a Bush administration arms embargo that gave Serbian forces an advantage in the war. He called the ethnic lighting in the region "perhaps our most difficult foreign poli-

The State Department hacktracked from Mr. Christopher's original comments, according to a U.S. diplomat in Germany. This was just a historica, interpretation," he said. "The thing now is to get on with solving the problems."

Mr. Christopher said Thursday that the early recognition of Croatia "was not condu-cive to a good solution" in the Balkans but the secretary added, "I don't try to assess biame in the situation.

The German reaction to Mr. Christopher's comments - both officially and in the press was quick and heated.

Mr. Kinkel said Mr. Christopher's version of events was "factually not correct."

In its lead front-page story, the daily Die Welt called Mr. Christopher's comment "the sharpest public criticism of Bonn policy by an American secretary of state in decades." "This Washington interpretation of developments in Yugoslavia is not new," said the German press agency DPA. "But there was until now a silent agreement in the U.S. government not to rock the boat. Why Christopher decided to pour oil on troubled waters and rub salt in the wound can only be

But an opposition member of parliament, Hermann Scheer of the Social Democratic Party, said Mr. Christopher was "largely correct" and that a link between the recognition of the republics and the escalation of the war was accepted everywhere but in Germany, which has historic ties to Croatia.

slavia has long worned Germany and France, with their concerns about Turkey and Algeria. But the months spent in regotiation on the Vance-Owen plan -which called for a multientime patchwork under a weak central government —allowed the Serbs to drive the Muslims from their villages and land, leaving them with an area around Sarajevo, a pocket in the western tip of Bosnia and some isolated eastern villages near Serbia. Officials predicted Western governments would demand that a Mushim state in Bosnia obtain a land corridor to the Adriatic and that some governments, mainly France, hoped to include the eastem villages of Bosnia where French troops have been active.

ma would face an uphili political and economic future and bode ill for future regional stability.

But with no foreseeable chance that Western force will be used to thwart Serbian designs in Bosnia, a French official said, "A Muslim state would be better than a nation of stateless people who might become Palestinians in Europe.

The thinking of Western countries, several sources added, was that a Muslim government offered the best hope of maintaining some discipline among dispossessed Muslims and prevent a diaspora liable to spawn terrorism. Although Bosnia's Muslims are Slavs, like their Serb and Croat neighbors, they could become more susceptible to feelings of Islamic fundamentalists that they are victims of Western hostility. Seeking to limit the damage, European officials were working Friday to put together a new peace plan, before the EC meeting next week that would present an approach based on partition as in some ways an extension of the safehaven plan for Bosnia's Muslims.

To back up a Western offer along these lines, European leaders have now tilted toward the Clinton administration's "lift and strike" strategy of ending the arms embargo and launching air strikes against Serbian attackers. ## At the Uffizi, Another Renaissance Begins

By Michael Kimmelman New York Times Service

LORENCE - The white walls are now bare and cracked, and where a window once was is a gaping space, 10 feet (3 meters) high and nearly as wide. The room in the Uffizi Gallery, formerly hung with paintings by the Italian 16th-century master Dosso Dossi, looks directly over the narrow street on which a car bomb exploded one night late last month.

Through that enormous opening in the wall, the view is breathtaking and horrific: set against the backdrop of the soft Tuscan hills and the great dome that Brunelleschi designed for the cathedral are the shattered red tile roofs of the buildings across the street from the Uffizi and the crumbled shell of an adjacent tower, in which a family killed in the explosion used to live. A few household belongings can still be seen on what remains of the tower's top floor, reduced to barely more than a roofless platform. Historic agricultural archives housed in the tower were destroyed.

And yet the story of the aftermath of the Uffizi bombing is a surprisingly encouraging one, with at least part of the museum to reopen Sunday. It may even turn out that the disaster will finally galvanize support for freeing Italy's pre-emment reposi-tory of art from the stranglehold of the Italian government's cultural bureaucracy. which has long burdened the museum, delaying years-old expansion plans and forcing it to compete with every small church and provincial museum in the area for operating money.

Although dozens of works suffered scrapes and cuts, only three paintings of the very first rank, Sebastiano del Piombo's "Death of Adonis," which hung in the room next to the Dossos, and Rubens's gigantic "Henry IV at the Battle of Ivry" and "Entry of Henry IV Into Paris." were seriously cut by the hailstorm of flying glass; even those cuts are not beyond repair. A major Rogier van der Weyden that was temporarily in storage survived with only a few minor nicks. And unbelievably, not only are the Dossos fine, but none of the Titians, Raphaels, Veroneses, Caravaggios or the Michelangelo that hung in the rooms nearest the bomb was damaged. Many of these paintings were saved by panels of shatterproof glass installed to

One of the curious byproducts of the bombing is that in these last few days the unharmed Botticelli gallery has become the single greatest room of art in the world. It is there that most of the paintings from the damaged rooms have been temporarily stored, the Botticellis on the walls joined by dozens of Titians, Raphaels, Rosso Fiorentinos, Ghirlandaios and Rubenses on the floor.

The rooms in the western half of the Uffizi that were damaged by the bomb will be closed indefinitely. But the other half of the museum, which houses the beloved collections of Piero della Francescas and Botticellis and Leonardos, are to reopen this weekend. (Admission will be free on Sunday.) A group of prized works by Mi-chelangelo, Rembrandt, Raphael, Titian and Caravaggio from the western rooms will also be exhibited temporarily in a ground floor gallery just beyond the Andrea del Castagno frescoes.

Considering that the Borghese Gallery in Rome has been undergoing renovation for years, with no end in sight, the rapid recovery of at least one part of the Uffizi is an astonishing event in Italy. The museum's small staff, several of whose members wept at the first sight of the damage. have labored virtually around the clock to restore order. To wander the salleries now is to get the sense of a place under control, with staff members calmly, happily chat-ting in hallways that just days earlier were littered with plaster and broken glass.

ONSTRUCTION on an elaborate new glass-enclosed exit from the Uffizi onto the Piazza Castellani began months ago but was not finished. Tourists come to peer at the construction site, clearly mistaking it for the bomb site, which is on the other side of the museum and closed from public view by police barricades. The vast majority of tourists who pass through the crowded Piazza della Signoria, next to the Uffizi, seem to take no notice, smiling for snapshots, as tourists long have, in front of the replica of Michelangelo's "David" out-side the Palazzo Vecchio (which also had windows broken by the explosion). Life has apparently returned almost to normal even on the Chiasso dei Baroncelli, which leads from the piazza, behind the Uffizi,

It's still not clear to the police who was responsible for the bombing or even whether the museum was the target. (The car was not parked in the courtyard of the Uffizi, as it might have been.) Only one side of the U-

The Corridoio Vasariano, the long corridor that crosses the street where the bomb exploded and extends all the way over the Arno River to the Pitti Palace. suffered the worst structural damage. Many of the most seriously damaged paintings, generally works of lesser significance, were stored in the corridor, which has long been closed to the public. The most important of these were by Gerrit von Honthorst and Bartolomeo Manfredi, ollowers of Caravaggio.

The paintings will be shipped off to conservators, who may well need months to complete their tasks. As for when the damaged rooms can be reopened, it will take months, if not longer.

The bombing may finally focus attention on the needs of Italy's pre-eminent museum, and perhaps even rally support for a long-standing expansion plan, a Grand Uffizi modeled after the Grand Louvre project, that had to be abandoned in mid-course because of indecision and lack of money. The plan would allow the Uffizi to put vastly more of its collection on view. It calls for turning an entire floor of the building, which was used to store documents until five years ago, into new galleries, effectively doubling the number of galleries, and creating permanent spaces for exhibitions.

The Uffizi has struggled to its feet after the bombing. It would be a paradox if the biggest setback in the museum's history ultimately helped to bring about its big-

Otherworldly Images A Rich Collection of Byzantine Icons

By Michael Gibson

ARIS — The irresistible warmth and density of the religious icons of the Eastern churches confront the layman with a range of issues that are rarely taken into account in Western art history. One may sense this while visiting the sumptuous selection of 130 Greek, Russian and Melkite icons from the 15th to the 19th centuries on view in Paris at the Musée Carnavalet. They are on loan from the extraordinary collection of the Abou Adal family in emperor in the West, the great crisis of the iconoclasts led to the destruction of thousands of priceless images and books.

Some of the emperors sided with the iconoclasts. The women of the empire, however, were generally in favor of the images. As Virgil Candea relates in the catalogue, when the envoy of Emperor Leo arrived in the palace of Chalcea to destroy the image of Christ it contained, he was dragged off and killed by a mob of indignant women.

Other women, including the Empresses Irene and Theodora, contributed over a period of 60 years to the defeat of the iconosclastic doctrines, and in March 843, a procession of monks bearing icons wound its way through Constantinople to the Basilica of Hagia Sophia, confirming the victory of ing the images.

This debate led to the claboration of a complex mystic theology of the religious image that was believed to play a crucial role in the divinization of man. Some images were even said to be "acheiropoietes" — not made by human hand. According to Candea, this conservatism in Eastern art resulted from the official triumph, in the middle of the 14th century, of the Hesychasts, a quietist movement that appears to have held points in common with certain mystic disciplines of the Orient that stress posture and breathing.

In Bonn, a Panoramic Look at Panoramas

By David Galloway

ONN - Two centuries have passed since an ingenious Irish painter named Robert Barker opened the world's first panorama theater at London's Leicester Square, where visitors could gape at an "all-embracing view" of the city. Barker had patented the idea of a painting-in-the-round in 1787, and smaller prototypes had aroused such enthusiasm that investors were quickly found to erect a permanent showplace for his illusionistic environments. With its inauguration in the summer of 1793, was born. The prosperity and rapid urbanization of the following de-cades would spread a veritable panoramania throughout the Western that the panorama both reflected and in turn promoted a new relationship between the individual and the world around him. When the Montgolfier brothers made the first balloon ascent in 1783, they riewed a curved horizon physically and psychologically remote from the conventions of landscape painting. Mountaineers, too, were in the process of developing circular dia-grams to record their observations. Thus, the panorama was both literally and figuratively "in the air" at the end of the 18th century. the American inventor Robert "Steamboat" Fulton took out a French patent for 360 degree paint-

Fulton's patent eventually passed into the hands of Louis lacques-Mandé Daguerre, whose inventiveness was matched by entrepreneurial cunning and a showman's flair. With special lighting effects and illusions of motion, his "Diaorama" on the Boulevard des Capucines was popularly known as the salle des miracles. There, as in most panoramas, visitors mounted a darkened central platform to view the painted scene. Between them and the illusionistic canvas ate space in which real artifacts and life-sized dummies were placed to intensify the realistic effect.

ascent with a vertically rolling panorama or rock to waves of the 'Marerorama" from the deck of a steamship, complete with billowing smoke and ocean spray. Paris had other, less dramatic novelties on view, including the cinema, which would soon make the panorama seem as old-fashioned and confining as the Victorian corset. Only 28 panoramas survived the celluloid revolution, and some of those exist today only as reconstructions or

Bonn offers its re-creation of 11 survivors that were photographed in 16 segments, digitalized and computer processed to remove the seams, then projected onto a cylindrical screen. It is a costly process. Unlike the pious admirer of Daguerre's recreation of St. Peter's Cathedral, who had to be physicalrestrained from proceeding to the distant altar, visitors to the Bonn show cannot forget that they are in the presence of a digitalized copy of a photographed copy of a painted copy of reality. All that is missing is the magic.

Japan Miniatures: A Surreal Appeal

Netsuke Monsters and Tsubas Snapped Up at London Sales

ONDON - There is something sistible about a collector's vision of the art he loved for most of his life when it is projected by his own objects suddenly turning up for sale, out of the blue. Fellow collectors just

It happened twice during this week in a rare diptych that reveals two facets of Japanese aesthetics in miniature, and

SOUREN MELIKIAN twice the result was the same — visitors bought as if they had never heard of the tiny carvings which, from the 17th to the 19th century, were hooked on top of a sash to stop the cords holding hanging boxes from slipping off. A French collector fiving in Beignan, Jacques Carre, who spent three decades building and refining his Liliantian some of Japanese character. Lilliputian army of Japanese characters and his fairy tale menageric of mice apes, snakes and birds, decided that he could go no further. Turning to Luigi Bandini, the Japanese specialist at Eskenazi's who had been a major instrument in his collecting endeavor. Carre asked him to dispose of the 243 pieces in his collection.

The collector's good fortune was to start in the early 1960s, when netsukes were plentiful in the book produced by Eskenparametric tells us of early encounters with the pianist Julius Katchen "whose con-certs were regularly followed by nights of netsuke viewing at the homes of other enthusiasts." I happened to meet Katchen at about the same time. The pismist went around with an attaché case padded to enscence the little ivery and wood creatures. He enjoyed doing a bit of business on the side. You couldn't miss the fleeting glint that went through his eyes, behind thick glasses, as he watched someone's fingers running over his pets in transit. Carré romantically notes: "Over breakfast one morning, he reinquished flummen kindness hath no bounds) the brigand Ha-lugisso Hakirsho, recognizing my increable fascination for legends. At the same time, abandoning hope of ever assembling a zodi-ac set by Kohosni, he also let me have the powerful Kohosni boar." (Both are in the show). Katchen's touch with people was as light as on the keys of his pisso. Soon, there came for Carre the fentassic opportunity of the seven auctions held at Sotheby's netween 1967 and 1969 when one of the greatest collections, that of Mark Hindson, was dispersed. Bandini says that they "hoisted netsukes to a new level of international awareness." A world record was set in June 1969 — at £2,300, Carrie was booked. He became friends with Bandini. In 1983, the dealer took him to visit Anne: Half Giundy, the grand old lady of netsukes. An invalid, she had spent a lifetime building her collection from her bodside. Together with her husband, John Hull Grundy, she had decided that the collection would be bequeathed to the British Museum, where it is now on display, in the Japanese Gallery.

Luckily, Mrs. Grandy wanted cash to make donations to provincial museums.

She let Carre purchase a 6.1-centureter (2.4-inch) group of two characters wearing masks in a Shooto performance of pithy humor. The group displays the Far Eastern variant of Brueghelian humor in a kind of understand grotesque. Add the signature of Hoshin, active in the mid-18th century, and that makes it even more decentury, and that makes it even more de-sirable. The name is recorded in the "Soken Kisho" written in 1781 by Inaba Tsuryn as an illustrated record of 57 living artists. This week, America's premier collector succembed in turn, to the tune of £14,000 (about $21,000). The group can now join the Joseph Kırıştin collection in Epoot, the World of the Future in Disney World. It is on display as a four-year loan to the art section in the Japanese pavilion run by Mitsukoshi. Carré wheedled another piece out of the sympathetic Anne Hull Grundy, an ivory owl carved by Tomokoto. Only four of his sculptures, including this one, are known thus far. A German collector from Hamburg got that one this week for £35,000.

Both pieces litted well into the collection of Carre. His is a world of threedimensional human caricature and of fairy tale fantasy where animals look human. Monsters have the feel of plush pets. A beast with the head of a lion, the horns of a scratch its hairy chest with a clumsy hoof.

This is probably the work of Yoshimura Shuzan, as Rosemary Bandini, a Japanese scholar at Eskenazi's, established by tracing the model to one of Inaba's illustrations. It created a sensation in 1913 when sold at auction for £6 and 5 shillings, as part of the famed Walter Lionel Behrens collection. It was last seen in public at Christie's on Dec. 15, 1987, when it made £5,200. Boosted by the new information published in the catalogue, it went this week for £15,000. Peanuts, though, compared with this week's record at Eskenazi, £80,000 paid for a seated mythical beast called "kirin" (Chinese "kilin"). This, too, once was a Behrens piece. It sold for only £3 and 3 shillings in the same 1913 auction. Tastes change. At the latest count, 175 pieces have been sold for over £1.2 million. This leaves far behind any single auction of netsukes ever. And it isn't over yet — the show goes on, with all the pieces still there.

EAVING this world of grinning wise men, snarling monsters and smiling hares for the show of metal sword guards or tsubes, which can be seen by appointment at 94 Eaton Place, on a third-floor walkup where Patrick Syz recently transferred his gallery of Oriental art, should be a cultural shock. Swashbuckling samurai and cuddly beasts would seem to have little in common. But the art they patronized is not so far removed from the fantasy world of Svz shows a one-mai collection formed by an outstanding connoisseur if he is to be judged by the 43 tsubas on view. Dr. Henry D. Rosin was a flight surgeon with the American forces in Kyushu, Japan's southernmost island, when he became acquainted with the art of the Japanese sword guard in 1957. He sought guidance from a Japanese connois-sear, Kazataro Torigoe, Often, Rosin would mail to his mentor the objects he considered acquiring. In the event, Rosin gathered some great rarities.

As one progresses through the show, the features that remain constant underneath the diversity are the small scale, the exin figuration, the care brought to detail. whether spare or abundant, and the baiance mostly achieved in asymmetrical fashion. In a Kamakura period tsuba, a butterfly is cut out through the disk, decomposed in abstract components. An Italian collector bought the iron guard this week for $22,000.

The quasi-abstract stylization of the earlier period vanished by the 17th century, making way, among other things, for detailed figural scenes. In some, the satirical strain of the netsukes comes out. A tsuba with two Europeans inlaid with brass on iron has a comic strip touch. As with netsukes, of which some are shaped like exquisite fruits, there was a highly poetic strain. Such is a guard beautifully carved in hollow relief with bamboo sprays by Yokoya Somin (1670-1733).

And as with netsukes, again, there is a surreal strain. Tanaka Seiju (1804-1876) signed an iron tsuba on one side of which a leans back against the curving frame. He gazes at the stalks of a tree topped by the head of a fish which gives the viewer an inquisitive round-eyed look. On the reverse of the tsuba, the scene is one of screne natural beauty. Gold and silver inlay enhance the precious quality and add to the eeriness in a mix of derision and elegance that is uniquely Japanese.

The Eskenazi story repeats itself in a minor key. Within days of the opening. Syz had sold 38 of the 43 tsubas for just under half a million dollars. Collectors, it would appear, also have a surreal world of their own.

Can the Biennale Change The World? Probably Not

By Roderick Conway Morris International Heraid Trabane

ENICE — "Can art still change the world?" is one of the themes proposed by Venice's 45th Biennale. A more pertinent question might be whether this immensely expensive and elaborate event — the number of visitors to attick has fallen from a high in 1976 of nearly 700,000 to less than 100,000 in 1990 — can continue to justify its existence without radically broadening its scope to include a much wider vision of contempo-

First staged in 1895 during the age of Great Exhibitions to celerate the silver wolding anniversary of the king and queen of Italy, the Riennale, which this year runs through Oct. 10, has become the bastion of avant-gardism of the kind that shocked and amused our grandparents, but which we may be lorgiven for regarding with a certain sense of deja val

This year's offerings include a set of rooms entirely tiled with an identical image of a human skull wrapped in string, a cow and a calf and in half and preserved in formaldehyde, a ski-slope built into the Somer of a Baroque church (by the Saiss artist Christoph Rutimann, nunning the risk of reinforcing the national stereotypes deplored by the event at larger and numerous noisy video screens showing (deliberately?) incompetently made vid-

More than 400 artists from 53 countries are exhibiting several thousand works at the main site in the Giardini di Castello at the east end of the city beyond the Arsenal and at more than a dozen additional locations - from churches and palaces, to the old Arsenal rope factory and a former granary scattered around the city.

NE of the Biennale's pecultarities is that a number of countries have permanent national pavilions, built from 1907 onwards, in the Castello Gardens. These gardens were conceived by Napoleon Bonaparte - just about the only positive contribution be ever made to Venice. Abutting on lively and densely populated working-class district of Castello, the gardens constitute the largest open space in the city, but are closed except to the paying public for the dozen weeks every two years or so when artistic events are held there — a situation deplored by many Venetians, and one that it is difficult to believe would be tolerated in any other major city.

The reason given for this absurd state of affairs --- often overlooked by visiting critics who are given to describing the whole Biennale area 25 "public gardens" - is the problem of guarding the pavilions (all of which are empty of exhibits except during the shows) against vandal-

Most impressive of all to my mind, however, was the work of more than a score of South African artists, three of them hosted by the Italian pavilion and the rest exhibiting at a special "Affinities" show at the Fondazione Levi near the Accademia Bridge, (the pieces will later go on tour to Rome and Am-

When Lower Interest Rates Aren't a Business Panacea

DA OTEMES LESSUSTESS

Washington Post Service ASHINGTON - Thanks perhaps to Ross Perot, it is now conventional political wisdom that lowering the federal budget deficit will lower interest rates and thereby spur investment by businesses in new plants

But a new study by the Washington-based Economic Policy Institute casts some doubt that the link between interest rates and investment is ironclad. Instead, Steven M. Fazzari, an economist at Washington University in St. Louis, found that businesses are more apt to invest when their sales are growing and they have cash in the bank, regardless of interest

Mr. Fazzan's conclusions are A study suggests that based on a study of 5,000 U.S. manufacturing companies from 1971 to 1990. Through computer analysis, he tried to determine which of the three factors corre- investment decisions. lated most highly with changes in investment in plants, equip-ment and research. Based on the study, Mr. Fazzari calculated the percentage reduction in investment that would result, hypothetically, from a set of negative circumstances: a flattening of sales, a 30 percent drop in cash flow and a 2 percentage point increase in interest rates after inflation is taken into account.

sales growth may be more important in

Among companies with long histories of relatively stagment growth, interest rates are an important determinant in investment decisions. But in firms with consistent growth, which account for the bulk of investment spending, interest rates are not a consistent factor.

The data, of course, do not explain why companies act the way they do. But Mr. Fazzari has some theories. Growing companies, he reasons, are dynamic entities where investment decisions hinge on more fundamental questions than interest rates: Are there additional customers to be won with this new capacity? Will we able to raise prices to recoup the investment? Can we get a loan? How long will it be before technology makes the product or the new equipment obsolete? The answers to such questions tend to overwhelm consideration of a 1 or 2 percentage point change in interest rates. Mr. Fazzari's conclusions run counter to a line of research by Harvard's Dale Jorgenson and Martin S. Feldstein that purported to establish a firm link between the willingness to invest and the cost of the capital. This school of thought gained great popularity during the 1980s, when many executives and economists cited the

Upheaval In Japan Places Talks in Jeopardy

By Andrew Pollack

Her Yest Times Server TOKYO — The political upheaval in Japan could jeopardize impor-tant trade talks with the United States and next month's Group of Seven summit meeting in Tokyo, analysts and officials said Friday, Political paralysis resulting from the turnoil could also delay additional measures to stimulate lapan's economy, which, according to figares released Priday, is showing the first feeble signs of recovering from its worst sharp in two decades.

Indeed, from the economic point of view, Friday's no-confidence wore against Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa, which will likely topple his government, could not have come at a more delicate time. "Political paralysis," said Ken-neth S. Courtis, strategist for Deutsche Bank in Tokyo, 'is the hig risk we run at this critical juncture where we need political leadership from Japan."

The long-term economic question is what will happen if the tur-moil finally leads to loss of power by the ruling Liberal Democratic Party, which has controlled the government for four decades. There is a widespread feeling here that one-party rule has provided political stability that has allowed the nation to concentrate on its

But a more immediate concern is that with Mr. Mivazawa now effectively a lame duck, it will be difficult for Japan to make key decisions on economic matters. And there is no shortage of important matters that will need attention in the coming weeks.

Chief among them is the Group of Seven meeting of industrial na-tions that will start July 7 in Tokyo and will deal with issues such as aid to Russia, revival of the world economy, and a liberalization of

A political vacrum could also make it more difficult for Japan to make the hard decisions that might framework with the United States, which is also expected in time for the summit. "No one's in a position to produce a deal," said Mr. Courtis of Deutsche Bank.

Some Japanese officials played down talk that the summit or trade negotiations will be affected.

But Rokuro Kato, a member of the ruling party's executive council, was quoted by Renters as saying: "There is no doubt that this will affect the summit as well as trade talks with the United States."

The political paralysis also makes it unlikely there will be new efforts to stimulate the economy in the near future. "The political development will mean no additional policy in the next two to three months," said Noborn Kawai, an economist with Morgan Stanley & Co. The economy is still weak but some experts say it has hit bottom. The government reported Friday that in the first three months of 1993, gross national product grew at an annual rate of 2.3 percent. That followed three quarters in which economic output had either shrunk or remained flat.

But that slightly positive showing could not erase a bad year. For all of the 1992 fiscal year, which also ended March 31, Japan's econ-omy grew only 0.8 percent, the worst showing since a 0.2 percent decline in fiscal 1974, following the क्तिहर औं टाइंड. Mach of the growth in the March quarter came from government spending as a stimulus package an-nounced last August finally began to take effect. But the nation's businesses are still grapping with excess capacity and failing profits, not to mention a stronger yea, which makes exports less competitive.

Sculley Goes Strategic Apple CEO Finds a Higher Calling

CUPERTINO, California John Sculley, recruited from PepsiCo Inc. to give Apple Computer Inc. a more disciplined business-management regime 10 years ago, stepped aside as Apple's chief executive on Friday. Mr. Sculley, 54, remains chair-man and chief technology officer but transfers his daily management responsibilities to his pro-tege, Michael H. Spindler, 50, who was already the computer maker's chief operating officer.

Mr. Scalley announced the transfer of responsibilities at a meeting attended by all six Apple directors, including Mr. Spindler, who was elected to the board in 1991. Mr. Sculley said he wanted to concentrate more on strategic opportunities for Apple and let Mr. Spindler manage the company's daily business.

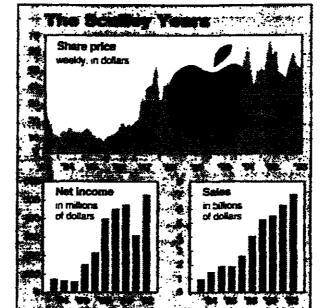

Mr. Sculley, an architect and graduate of Brown University who made a career in marketing at Pepsi before being recruited by Apple's co-founder and former chairman, Steven P. Jobs, had no technology-industry experience before joining Apple. Within two years, Mr. Sculley fired Mr. Jobs after disputes over the company's course. Mr. Jobs, chairman of Next Computer Inc., said he was delighted by the Apple shake-up.

"I've known Mike Spindler for close to 15 years and I think he is top-notch," he said.

Over the last year, Mr. Sculley had indicated that he wanted to pursue other kinds of activities in the segment of the electronics industry where computing, com-munications and entertainment are merging.

he also took a high profile in last year's presidential election campaign. Mr. Scolley, a Repub-lican, joined a number of Silicon Valley executives in supporting the Clinton-Gore tecket but declined an appointment in the Wall Street, which regards Mr.

Spindler highly because of his skills managing Apple sales in Europe, took the corporate shift in stride. Apple shares opened up

37.5 cents at $41.625. They closed at $41. Some analysts said the shift by Mr. Sculley, who has masterminded alliances with companies including Motorola Inc., International Business Machines Corp., Sharp Corp., Siemens AG, and others, would give him more freedom to construct other ventures. "It's a terrific move for the company," said Sanjiv Hingor-ani, of Nomura Research, a veteran technology analyst. "Scul-ley has been playing an industryvisionary role, so the announcement is positive for the company and the stock." Also, Mr. Hingoram said, the move pulls Mr. Spindler more into the limelight now, where he can get credit for changes at Apple, including recent price cuts calculated to build market share. Apple is neck and neck with IBM Personal Computer Co. for first place in market share in the $70 oillion PC industry.

But some analysts, as well as Mr. Jobs, suggested that some of the alliances Apple has been building might have come too late, forcing Apple to watch as PCs based on Intel Corp. chips took 90 percent of the market, while Apple machines, which use Motorola chips, were confined to Apple recently warned Wall Street that failout from the PC wars would trim its third-quarter earnings below last year's $131.6 million, or $1.07 a share. This doesn't come as a surprise to me because Sculley, like a lot of people in the semiconductor and computer industries, is a person of many interests," said Robert Sobel, a business historian at Holstra University. "He's become one of the 'New Age' types who likes to commune with nature, associate with people in Hollywood."

Mr. Sculley's infatuation with Hollywood led David Wu of S.G. Warburg & Co. to suggest the Apple chairman might ulti-mately establish a multimedia technology company.

As part of his alliance building.

Mr. Scalley propelled Apple into two joint-venture companies with IBM, including Kaleida Inc., a

France Assails Exports Based On Low Wages

Compiles by Our Staff From Dapatche PARIS — President François Mitterrand said Friday that the European Community must adopt stiffer trade parriers to protect its markets from goods produced in low-wage countries lacking labor

"I would like to see the European Community give itself common rules to protect its inclustries from foreign goods produced in social conditions that cause such an imbalance in the costs of production that we cannot long put up with the competition," he said.

The Socialist president, speaking on Danish television, acknowledged that he was advocating a form of protectionism.

"But Europe was founded at the time of the Treaty of Rome on the notion of preference among Com-munity members," he said, referring to the 1957 treaty founding the

Mr. Mitterrand's remarks were echoed by Alain Lamassoure, France's European affairs minister who said that the Community had to make sure that Southeast Asia and Latin America did not use abusive labor practices to undercut EC industries.

"Countries which force children to work, which resort to massive counterfeit, cannot be said to respect the same ground rules as we do and cannot benefit from normal trade concessions," Mr. Lamas-soure said. "We need a certain form of protectionism against these

The remarks by the two men highlighted concern in France that a GATT world trade agreement could tear down EC trade barriers, leaving the Community market vulnerable to a flood of products from developing countries where wages and welfare benefits are low. Earlier this week, Philippe de

Villiers, a leader of the center-right party Union for French Democracy, called on Prime Minister Edouard Balladur to apply stricter customs duties to protect EC in-

ICI Chief Lashes EC

For 'Crisis' By Erik Ipsen

LONDON — Europe's political leaders got a stinging rebuke Fri-day from one of the region's leading industrialists, who demanded immediate action to stimulate economic recovery.

Sir Denys Henderson, chairman of ICI PLC, Britain's largest chemi-cals maker, said, "There does ap-pear to be a crisis in Europe of serious dimensions, with very little visible evidence that far-reaching solutions are being sought.

He called on the EC Commission to give "the highest priority now to introducing emergency measures right across Europe to stimulate economic recovery. In a speech to the European Chemical Industry Council, Sir Demys insisted that there be an end to sterile" debates over the Maastrich treaty on European union. He also urged that the push for political and monetary union be "suspended for the time being." Instead, all efforts should be concentrated on improving the operation of the single European market, he said.

Sir Denys bitterly recalled the optimism that prevailed in 1989 when the Berlin Wall fell and when European businessmen happily looked forward to 1992 and the creation of a prosperous, unified European market. Instead, he notsimism and uncertainty prevail, demand is weak, interes

Deal Worth $1 Trillion Gets Push

GENEVA — Officials of the major trading nations have concluded two days of private talks at which they agreed to push hard for an accord this year that would open up government procurement con-tracts worth 51 trillion to international competitive bidding, GATT said Friday.

Japan, the United States and the European Community members are among 23 countries hoping to extend a GATT pact to cover procurement of services, utilities and contracts awarded by local and state ernments, the world trade body said.

An accord would permit in-ternational bidding in such public seasors as electricity. railways and telecommunic tions, now largely awarded to domestic companies.

A GATT spokesman said the nations involved intended "to intensify negotiations and reach agreement on a text and coverage" by Dec. 15.

The current GATT agreement, negotiated in 1979 un-der the Tokyo Round, covers about $50 billion in procure-

PARIS — Credit Local de France, the first company to fall under the hammer in France's new privatization program, said Friday that the international tranche of its share offering was oversubscribed three times. A total of 10.9 million shares, equivalent to 30.5 percent of its capital, is up for sale and international investors were offered 4.4 million shares. The share sale began on Friday and will continue until June 23.

The government went ahead with the sale even before a privatization law was passed because the bank, which finances local authorities, is already partially privatized and its shares are quoted on the Bourse. The (Bloomberg, AFX) sale will cut the state's direct stake to 8 percent from 25.5 percent.

will be listed on the Brussels bours Quick has grown strongly in the past decade in France and Belgium and currently has 220 hamburger restaurants, mainly in those two countries. McDonald's has 1,424 restaurants across Europe. Quick said its aim was not to attack McDonald's market share directly but to make sure it shared in the rapidly expanding European fast-food market. It added that it was looking into branching out of its main French and Belgian mar-kets to go into Germany, the Neth-erlands, Spain and Portugal.

The company's chief executive, Thomas Meisser, acknowledged that McDonald's was a "worldwide market leader" but that "it's a

Days of Whine, Not Roses Be Happy and Work Harder, Germans Told

BONN — Saying he was fed up with whining hypocrites, Chancellor Helmut Kohl urged Gerins on Friday to be patriots and work hard to solve their economic problems.

At the same time, after several regional leaders said that civil servants should put in additional hours, Economy Minister Ginter Rexrodt suggested that the textile industry should work on Sundays and hobdays. These remarks highlighted a public debate on whether people should spend more time on the job in a country that has been at the forefront of moves in Europe to reduce work hours. Mr. Kohl, looking back over two decades as chairman of the ruling Christian Democrats, said the world had andergone dramatic changes since German unification in 1990 and citizens must djust to new realities. We have many reasons for being happy, in stead of going on with this whining on a high level day after day," Mr. Kohl told a CDU party gather-ing. "We should stop this hypocrisy. Of course we have problems but they can be solved."

In Berlin, following his earlier remarks here Friday about the textile industry, Mr. Reprodusald the time had come to reform German labor law for industrial survival. The daily Stuttgarter Zeitung, in a commentary on Friday, said Germany had long ceased to be the land of economic miracle. "The economic and financial structure of the country must be over-hauled from top to bottom and above all adapted to the bigger Germany," it said. "And the bigger Germany is a poorer Germany." Currently Germany leads the world with the shortest work week and most paid holidays. The nation's 4 million metalworkers have been working a 36-hour week since April. This is set to fall to 35 hours in 1995. Mr. Kohl described the Christian Democrats as "a party of German patriots," Acknowledging that this was a slightly controversial expression, he shrink from using this word. This is a good, tried and tested German word.

"Patriotism always rules out chauvinusm and nationalism. Whoever stirs anti-foreigner hatred cannot be a German patrice."

added: "I ask you not to surrender this word to the right-wing radicals. There is no reason for us to

Mr. Kohl responded to praise from his colleagues attending the congress with an appeal for people to count their blessings and get down to work, saying: "I am grateful that we today live

The party congress discussed proposed economic reform that includes extending the work week for civil servants by an hour and a half, to 40. "! simply can't understand this discussion about ner we should work one hour more or less." Mr. Kohl said. "We are talking about securing the future." He said society must be ready to scrap crusty old structures and set new goals, consolidate the state budget and move ahead with deregulation of, for example, highways and postal and telecomons services. The chief minister of Saarland, Oskar Lafontaine, one of the leaders of the Social Democratic opposition, argued that a shorter work week would case unemployment. Germany's higgest union, IG Metall, said it would not give up the step-by-step plan leading to a 35-hour work week. "Shortened working hours have created a million new jobs in the metal industry," said an official. (AFP, Reuters)

reguled to the Statt From Disposition PARIS - A merger between Renault SA and Volvo AB, which have crossholdings and have been discussing closer ties for months. should be announced by September at the latest, industry sources said Friday. The sources said the announcement may come at the end of July. They said all "obstacles" to a merger of the automakers had been surmounted but a number of technical issues regarding the structure of the new company had to be settled. The sources said France's new conservative government was are-vinced of the need to rapidly deeper the ties between the two companies but was seeking an assurance that decision-making authority in the new group remained with the Neither Renault nor the French Industry Ministry applied comment officially. But Industry Minister Gerard Longuet said in an interview in Le Figaro that a merger "is indispensible" and could precede Renault's privatization, which has not yet been scheduled. Before privatization, they needed to take the link-up with Volvo a stage further because there was too much uncertainty in the way it was

In the face of a deepening crisis in Europe, Sir Denys charged that Europe's political leaders had done little or nothing and that "constructive cooperation among member states had evaporated.

As for recent reports that the head of the EC Commission, Jacques Delors, was weighing steps to tackle the recession, Sir Denvs said this had come three years too late. He chided European leaders for failing to have managed interest rates properly. He and others at the conference also decried the recent volatility in Europe's exchange rates for the damage this had done to both national economies and their own companies.

MELBOURNE - The Australian government announced Friday further deregulation of the banking industry that would allow mergers of smaller banks and foreign takeovers of all but the nation's major four institutions.

It would also permit most individual sharcholders to take a maximum 15 percent stake, up from 10

However, Treasurer John Dawkins ruled out mergers among the four biggest banks: National Australia Bank, Commonwealth Bank of Australia, Westpac Banking Corp. and Australia & New Zeaand Banking Group.

The package continues deregnia-tion of financial markets, including banks, begun by the ruling Labor Party when it came to power in 1983.

Mr. Dawkins said the government would allow the merger of regional, state and smaller banks subject to some conditions.

TOKYO — U.S. companies have been largely left out of the Japan-dominated business of making flat-panel displays for use in notebook computers and television sets. But some American can companies are becoming suppliers of the equipment Japanese companies are using to

The biggest example of that came this week when Applied Materials Inc. of Santa Clara.

California, and Komatsu Ltd., a Japanese maker of construction machinery, announced that they planned to form a joint venture to make and sell equipment used to produce liquid-

Applied Materials is the world's largest pro-

China's High-Tech Fund U.S. Partner to Bring Half the Backing

New York Times Service

NEW YORK -- China took another step down the capitalist road Friday with the creation of its first international venture-expital fund, the Shang-hai Pacific Technology Venture Fund. The $20 million fund plans to invest in 30 to 40 technology companies in Shanghai. The start-up companies - some already formed, others still to be created — will be in selected high-technology fields, such as computer software, telecommunica-tions, cable television and pharmaceuticals. The fund will make its first investments later this year.

Half of the financial backing for the fund will come from nine state-owned Chinese banks and companies, while the other half will be invested by an American partner, Pacific Technology Venture Fund Inc. of Boston. For the Chinese, the Shanghai fund is an effort to spur development of an entrepreneurial high-technology sector, tapping American money and business expertise.

"The Shanglari government wants to reform the structure of its industry," said Lin Zhenyuan, the fund's chairman, who stepped down earlier this year after a decade as Shanghar's deputy mayor in charge of economic development. We need the know-how much more than we need the money," Mr. Liu said Friday in a telephone interview.

There has been a flood of foreign investment in plays, using so-called active-matrix technology, are essentially giant chips made of glass instead of silicon, so that modified versions of semiconductor production equipment can be used to Active-matrix screens, which can display color video images, have been very expensive, in part because they have been difficult to make. By some estimates, more than half the screens coming off the production lines are defective and cannot be sold. Recently, however, Japa-nese companies have succeeded in reducing the defect rate and have stepped up their invest-ments in fiquid-crystal-display production.

To reduce defects and costs, Japanese flat-panel makers have been anxious to obtain the most sophisticated production equipment. While most of that has come from Japanese suppliers, some U.S. manufacturers, such as KLA Instru-

China recently - in the booming Shanghai Stock Exchange in factories and in joint ventures.

Another Chinese venture furn, Guandong Science & Technology Venture Capital Co. was set up earlier this year; it is backed by several government agencies. But the Shanghai fund is believed to the first venture-capital fund with a foreign partner to be authorized by China.

The U.S. partner, Pacific Technology, is also discussing similar joint investments with the Chinese authorities in Guandong, the province near Hong Kong, and in Beijing.

Pacific Technology was founded more than a decade ago by Patrick J. McGovern, chairman of the International Data Group, a leading publisher of computer magazines, such as PC World and Computerworld

The Shanghai fund plans to work with the companies it backs in much the same way as an American venture capitalist works with start-ups. There will be plenty of hands-on coaching at the beginning, said Hugo Hsiung, managing director of the Shanghai fund.

"After a few years, we want to take them public," said Mr. Hsiung, a former Chinese official who was educated in the United States.

The flourishing Shanghai Stock Exchange, he added, should prove an eager market for the initial stock offerings of the new companies.

ments and Photon Dynamics, both based in San Jose, California, also have sold machines to develop flat-panel manufacturing equipment three years ago by Sharp Corp. and Toshiba Cosp., two leading screen makers. In late 1991, it set up a Japan-based unit called Applied Display Technology to sell such machines.

Under the proposed new agreement, Ko-matsu will invest tens of millions of dollars to buy a 50 percent share of Applied Display, tive of Applied Materials, said that the company wanted a Japanese partner to help it build its business more quickly, because active-matrix display production appears on the verge of rising rapidly.

Applied Materials said it was first asked to

H.K. Tunnel Deal Revives Hopes on Airport Financing

Compiled to the Start From Dispatches Chinese officials reached agreement: Finday on granting a franchise to build and operate a third road tudnel under Hong Kong's Victoria Harbor, a key part of the lang-dis-puted project for a new airport.

The two sides said they also had made progress toward resolving their dispute over financing the rest of the massive works program :- ing of the Joint Linison Group. lated to the construction of the airport, according to the head of the British team, Anthony Gaisworth,

The agreement on the harbor tunnel, one of 10 major road. bridge, rail and landfull projects re-lated to the airport, drew praise from Hong Kong legislators plus a

On the Hong Keng Stock Exchange, the Hang Seng index rose 11.65 points to close at 7.200.75.

The tunnel or head and the contract of the staff from the con The tunnel, which will cost £.5 billion Hong Kong dellars ($64) million), will link western Hong Kong island with the new airport being planned for the British co.:my as it approaches the 1947 tracsfer to Chinese sovereigniy.

The franchise to build and operate the dual three-lane tunnel, which will be 1,340 meters (4,44). feet) long and have a further 660 meters of approach roads and tun-nels, will be awarded to Western Harbor Tunnel Co., a consortium including the Wharf (Hadings-controlled Cross Harber Tunnel Co. and the China-controlled Cri-na International Trust & Investmen: Hong Kong Ltd.

The agreement, which came at a meeting of the autport committee of the Joint Listson Group, signaled a further easing of a hilateral dispute that began in October when Governor Chris Patten proposed more democracy for Hong Kong.

Mr. Galsworthy said the frazchise would next go before the Leg-islative Council for approval, while the airport committee would hold HONG KONG — British and arother meeting later this month. A Hong Kong legislator, Steven riday on granting a franchise to Poon, welcomed the tunnel agreement but voiced disappointment that no further progress had been announced on Imanoing the airport Sim he said that he was pleased that both sides were showing sinceris and that he hoped agreement would be reached in the next meet-

Fight Is On For Miramar

HONG KONG - A takeover battle for course of Miramar Hotel & Investment Co., a major Hong Keng hotel concern, appeared under way Friday when Henderson investment announced it had bought one-third of the concern. China-controlled CITIC Pacific and Chaung Kong (Holdings), ahith is the flagship investment vahicle of the Hong Kong tycoon L: Ka-shing had earlier raised their inc for Miramar to 16.50 Hong Kong dodars ($2.13) per share, from 15.50 dellars.

This would value all of Miramar 21 9.37 hillion dollars. Headerson levestment, part of Handerson Land Development and controlled by Lee Shau-kee, did not distince what it had paid for the 34.75 percent stake. Brokers specu-lated it was 17 dollars a share. Miramar has said its shares are worth at least 20 dollars each. Yearne Chi Shing Estates Ltd. said that it planned to sell a 20.45 percent stake in Miramar.

Alan Bond Is Charged Over Sale of Painting

The Associated Press PERTH, Australia - Alan Bond, the bankrupt businessman, has been charged with fraud over a French painting. Lawyers said Friday that Mr. Bond would plead not guilty to charges relating to deals he did over Manet's "La Promenade."

bail of 200,000 Australian dollars ($135,000) on Thursday. Prosecutors said Mr. Bond's family company, Dallhold In-vestments, bought the painting an art leasing company, which leased it to Mr. Bond's main company, Bond Corp. Holdings.

When the lease expired in 1988, Bond Corp, purped down an offer from the leasing company to buy the work for 1.6 million dollars. It was instead bought by Dallhold, which subdollars at a New York anction.

Prosecutors accuse Mr. Bond of fraud for not telling Bond Corp.'s directors that they could have acquired the paint-ing far below the market value. ## 'Indicators': What They Don't Mean

HEY are shrouded in secrecy im-penetrable enough to delight a Cold War-era Kremlinologist. And so they must be: Once the financial markets decide that a certain figure, ratio of figures, or statistic is important enough to be considered an "indicator," it loses all impor-

Take the supposed importance of moneysupply figures during the administrations of Ronald Reagan in the United States, Margaret Thatcher in Britain and François Mitterand in France, after his mid-'80s conversion to a form of monetarism by his senior aide at the time, Jacques Attali. In each case, the theory was that tight money supply would have beneficial effects for the various economies, and that favorable figures would be interpreted positively (i.e., greeted by price rises) by each country's stock markets. So much for theory. The practice was that a series of statistics was used. Broad money, narrow money - even paper in circulation — were in vogue at one time or another. But they were discarded, because they were ma-nipulated by governments, and their importance was distorted by the markets.

The governmental manipulation is easily explained in terms of political advantage. But the distortion is not quite so easy to pin down. One explanation is that the markets have a form of schizophrenia when dealing with indicators.

On one hand, the markets are smart. They see through the manipulation of a figure and require a fairer measure. On the other, they are dumb. Once the market has decided that a figure is important, the figure's level takes on a cosmetic significance of its own. No matter how poorly an economy is performing, a certain figure must record a certain level as a precondition of happiness. It is as if a nervous car passenger tries to ensure a peaceful journey by nailing the car's speed-ometer to its dashboard at the 30 miles per hour mark. Because of the markets' obsession with a given indicator, the figure is often manipulated and so becomes meaningless.

Which brings us (sort of) to the dollar and the yen. The 100 yen to the dollar figure is not magical, is not an indicator and has no significance, psychological or otherwise. And, anyway, this column's call is that the dollar-yen rate bottomed out at 105 last Wednesday.

Prague Stock Market Gears Up for Business

By Digby Larner

HEN the Prague stock ex-change opened for business on April 6, there was one drawback: It had no shares to trade.

Although it did about $150,000 worth of business on its first day, it was mainly in bonds. But things should change by the end of June, when 53 of the Czech Republic's newly privatized companies take their first tentative steps into the secondary market. By July 1994, they are expected to be joined by at least 800 more companies.

For international investors, an increasingly active Prague stock exchange is bound to arouse interest. The Czech Republic is con-sidered one of Eastern Europe's most economically advanced countries and has already attracted much foreign investment. Companies such as Volkswagen, Nestle and Philip Morris have been in partnership with Czech companies for some time.

But, warns Rory Landman, the director of Invesco MIM in London, private investors should see how the market shapes up before becoming involved.

"The value of companies hitting the stock exchange is based on their estimated value when they were privatized," he said. "Their real value will be dictated by the market and I suspect most are currently four or five times above their actual worth."

The delay in bringing Czech companies to the market stems mainly from how they were privatized. Before Czechoslovakia split into the Czech Republic and Slovakia last year, the country's finance minister, Vaclav Klaus, devised a plan to allocate vouchers to every adult citizen. For 1,000 koruny ($34), voucher holders were awarded 1,000 points. These could be used to bid for shares in stateowned companies. More than 8 million peo-ple participated in the program and 6.6 mil-lion placed most or all of their points in 437 investment funds. These will be invested in companies as they come to the market.

The bottleneck was caused by the state holding company, the National Property Fund, when Czechoslovakia became two independant states. A dispute arose over whether Slovaks should be allocated Czech assets. Because the most attractive companies are based in the Czech Republic, many Slovaks put their vouchers into Czech funds. Now a compromise has been reached and the National Property Fund is selling 53 blocks of shares. In addition, the board of M.B. the Czech stock exchange decided to register all shares bought through the voucher scheme as unlisted securities. Although the exchange opened in April, the first full day of trading was scheduled for June 22, but has since been delayed until later in the month. Market observers say the best performing shares will be considered for listing later.

Cdenek Bakala, general director of Credit

Swiss First Boston in Prague, said he was confident of growing foreign investment in Czech equities. There are no barriers to foreign investors other than the need for a custodian agreement, because Czech shares are not allowed to leave the country," he said. "All they need do is contact a Czech broker. We are cautious about how much volume there will be on the first day but we're confident this will build steadily during the rest of the year. We've encountered a lot of foreign interest and it's simply a matter of whether or not this translates into actual purchases. I think it will take time."

William Calvert of Citibank in London believes the biggest discouragement to inter-national investors is the problem of working out how much shares are worth.

"The intention was to have share prices available by the end of the month," he said. But because people are bidding vouchers and not money it's difficult to see how this will happen." He added that the market was unlikely to begin trading significant volume unless foreigners were attracted to the market. For now, he fears that only the most speculative will become involved.

"The trouble is that most of the really attractive companies were bought up wholesale by foreign interests," Mr. Calvert said. The Pilzen brewery is one of the best remaining options, but even that is reported to be in trouble unless government money is pumped in. Until people start putting up hard cash I can't see how anyone can come up with accurate share prices,"

The Czech Republic has been hit by recession and a number of companies are said to be on the verge of bankruptcy. Some analysts believe international investors should only consider buying into companies that use Western management techniques and have Western capital.

Five of the largest voucher funds own 53 percent of the Pilzen brewery. More than 70 percent of all Czech shares are controlled by the 200 largest funds and these are expected to dominate the market.

In spite of the success funds have had in attracting international investors, they also have been controversial. One worry is that most funds are underwritten by financial institutions and only a small number have taken on independent custodians. This is an option with Czech funds, even though it is compulsory in many Western countries.

When full trading begins many of the smaller funds are expected to collapse or to merge with larger ones. There is also concern over the amount of influence fund managers may wield over privatized companies. Victor Kozeny, the head of the Harvard Capital & Consulting fund, has acknowledged that he intends to restructure the companies in which his fund invests. He recently demanded the removal of the president of the country's largest bank. Ceska Sporiteina, for allegedly breaking privatization rules. The bank had applied for shares in the rival Komercui bank, even though direct bidding between banks is not allowed.

The Harvard Capital & Consulting fund was itself attacked when funds were competing for vouchers. Mr. Kozeny's fund guaranteed a first year's dividend of 28 percent, a figure much higher than those of most rival funds. Some managers doubted that be could meet this promise and accused Mr. Kozeny of making wild claims in a bid to attract a bigger share of voucher holders.

Lira, Escudo, Peseta Bonds Aim of Lombard Odler Fund

Lombard Odier Investment Management Services, the London-based arm of the eponymous Swiss bank, has launched a mutual fund that invests in Italian, Portuguese and Spanish bonds.

The fund's investment objectives are twofold. The first is to maximize capital gains by committing money to bond markets where interest rates are expected to fall. The firm believes that rates in Spain and Italy, presently among the highest in Europe, will fall the most in the over the next 18 months. The second aim is to take limited currency risk outside the Swiss franc. Therefore, the managers will buy currency contracts to guard against depreciation in the Italian, Portuguese or Spanish currencies.

Minimum investment is 2,500 Swiss francs

($1,680). There is a management fee of 0.25 percent per annum. For information, coniact Lombard Odier at Norfolk House, 13 Southampton Place, London WC1A 2AJ. Tel: (71) 831.2350.

Robert Fleming & Co. Floats Gold Warrants in Hong Kong

The investment house Robert Fleming & Co. has floated a series of call warrants on the price of gold. The warrants — highly volatile securities that will soar in price if the gold price increases but will be worthless if it does not — are to trade in Hong Kong and allow holders to buy gold at $377.50 per ounce until June 5, 1995.

It will take 100 warrants to buy one ounce of gold, so at the initial offering price of 4.38 Hong Kong dollars (57 cents), gold will have to rise by $57 an ounce, to $434.50, for the warrants to be intrinsically worth more than the offering price. the offering price.

The American Stock Exchange, meanwhile, has listed three-year call warrants on the Eurotrack 200 index, which includes the 100 stocks of the Financial Times 100 index of British companies plus 100 stocks from other European countries.

Their intrinsic value rises by $1 for every 50-point rise in the index above 1214.21, its level when trading began earlier this month. The Eurotrack warrants are settled in cash.

Finding Stars in a Galaxy of Computers

By Kate Bales

N the cosmos of computers, it's hard to determine which is changing more quickly: Hardware capacity or soft-ware choices. In either case, if your home computer is only performing word-processing programs and Nintendo, you are missing out on a minber of options that can organization nize and enhance your investment portfolio.

Although walking into a computer store and facing what looks like limitless shelves of metal might seem like a buyer's nightmare, there are only a few factors to keep in mind when making a selection, said Ben Gottesman, a project leader at PC Magazine. These are, he said, "Your budget, the computer's basic memory capacity and what options you need.

Bike Makers Are Riding High

By Ann Brocklehurst

THE changes in the bicytie business in recent years show that learning how to make and sell vices, unlike learning how to ride ested in learning from it incine is something that can easily be forgotten. bitypile makers that are publicly traded appear to have emerged the strenger from the upheavai. Industry analysts say that they are now more competitive both internationally and at home, where foreign imports' share of the $2.5 billion per year market has dropped from percent to about 35 percent.

Although the No.1 U.S. bike maker. Huffy Corp., saw its profits fall last year after a new, more expensive bicycle — the "Cross Sport" - failed to catch on, analysts like the company because of its continuing strong sales of cheaper bikes in mass-market discount chains like K-Mart and Waimart.

Bike demand is very strong right now, partly due to the weather, which was very good this spring," said Gary Chin, an analyst at Oppenheimer and Co. in New York. He has a "buy" recommen-dation on Huffy, which he sees as undervalued. He expects earnings to recover in the company's bike division and to continue to grow in its other, smaller divisions, like baby car seats and garden tools. ## Investing Without the Frills

By Barbara Wall

O you have a talent for spotting a good stock, but feel you lack the necessary funds to realize your ambitions? Or are you simply looking for a cost-effective means of buying and selling inter-national equities? Rather than clump for a munici fund — an imsatisfactory compromise if you are self-confident enough to fancy your chances against profession stock selectors — it might be worth considering an execution-only — or discount — brokerage. As the name suggests, what you get is buy or sell orders carried out on your behalf — no fancy reports, no investment advice. Just the deal done, as simply as possible.

Most major European banks and full-cost stockbrokers restrict their execution-only share-dealing service to wealthy investors. "We recommend that clients have a minimum initial trade of fancy reports, 110 action costs," said a spokesman for investment advice.

James Capel, an investment management company based in London, "In most cases, however, we would suggest that clients opt for our advisory service instead.

Discount brokerages tailor their services and commission schedules to suit the smaller investor. By avoiding the expense of funding a research department, discount brokers can afford to scale down their commission charges — in many cases the cost of placing an investment can be halved. Fidelity U.K. claims that their rates for British security transactions are up to 71 percent less that full-cost British brokers and 63 percent less that what the average European broker would charge for trading U.S. secu-rities. Charles Schwab, a U.S. fund management company, opened a discount brokerage in London recently, and makes similar claims

If you are pleasantly surprised by a broker's commission schedule, it is always worth taking a closer look at the other charges, if any. Some brokers will charge a holding fee or custody fee, while others may charge for currency conversion. Fi-delity accounts — holding securities other than American or British ones — are subject to an annual custody charge of $154. A company spokesman explained that Fidelity prefers to hold stock for clients to mplify matters and to cut down on delivery expenses. ## Out of Tour de France, U.S. Team Makes a Vow: 'Next Time'

By Samuel Abt

onal Herald Tribune PARIS - Eddie B. insisted he was not crushed. "I am tough guy." he said. "Long time in this business. I'm not crying." Eddie B. insisted he was not even mad. "I'm not mad, no. I am not." What exactly was Eddie B. after the Subaru-Montgomery bicycle team he coaches rejected an invitation to share a berth in the Tour de France?

The word, he agreed, was determined. "I am guy who says, 'O.K., next time we show you you were wrong."

Eddie Borysewicz. 54, who is known as Eddie B. because nobody in the United States could pronounce his name after he moved there from his native Poland in 1977 to coach bievele racers, was more than determined.

"Absolutely determined," he decided. "Next time we don't need any more wild card. We're going to build team and qualify automatically next year. We're going to have top team."

Subaru-Montgomery, an American team that has been racing against European professional teams for only two seasons, now ranks No. 24 in computerized standings. The first 14 teams qualify automatically for the Tour de France, the world's greatest bicycle race, and the 6 others in the field are chosen on a wild-card basis.

When the invitations were issued Tuesday, Subani-Montgomery was asked to share a slot with the Chazai team based in France. Chazal would have provided five of the nine riders. Subaru-Montgomery four; they would have worn their own team jerseys and been listed as Chazal-Subaru.

"Not possible." Eddie B. judged, trampling articles and verb tenses in the stampede of his English during a phone interview from the Midi Libre race in the south of France. "It's different teams, different management, different interests."

Could the two teams have worked like one? "I don't think so." Eddie B. said. "it's always going to be two different teams." The last mixed entry in in coming to Europe had been to race in the Tour

Eddie B. added that he had rejected invitations this season from both the Giro d'Italia and the Vuelta de Espana, the world's second and third most

'Some teams it's enough, "I was in Tour de France." For us that's not enough. It's to do well. And with four guys it's impossible to do well.'

prestigious bicycle stage races, because the team's preparation was focused on the Tour de France.

The rejection was not made in a snit, Eddie B. said. "Why we turned down this offer is not because we should have more riders. We like to words began coming slowly and heavily under- arounders from Telekom.

"Some teams it's enough, 'I was in Tour de to do well in Tour de France."

Eleven months ago, when the Tour de France finished a daily stage in Mulhouse. Eddie B. visited the race for the first time. Just to look it over. just to get the feel of it, he said. Applying for accreditation to wander through the race's restricted preserves, Eddie B. had to explain to a Tour official who he was and who the Subaru team was. He spelled both names carefully. "Next year we in Tour also," Eddie B. pledged. The official looked dubious.

"No kidding." Eddie B. told him as an acquaintance relayed the message into French. "Next year better team, new riders for Subaru-Montgomery, and we race in Tour de France." During the winter Eddie B. did sign better riders: a sprinter plucked officials in San Francisco said, because their goal participate with entire team but," and here his from a Dutch team, another climber, two all-

"You see improvement." Eddie B. was saying France, we want to do well. Only because we like now on the phone. "Better results, team always rides hard. Now this wild card. Impossible for us Eddie B. said that he had explained the rejection to do well. And with four guys it's impossible to do to his riders and that they had understood. "Sad, but that's normal, O.K.? Riders feel bad, riders believe they should ride Tour de France.

Instead, one group will spend July, Tour de France time, riding in the unheralded Tour of Norway and another group will return to the United States for races in the West. "Arrangements made today." Eddie B. said.

One of the few Subaru-Montgomery riders not yet informed of the Tour de France rejection is Atle Kvalsvoil, the team's leader. He crashed heavily in a descent on a mountain in the Classique des Alpes last month and fractured his skull. "Kvalsvoll training right now," Eddie B. said, "trying to make it back to Tour de France. I must call him to say, 'Hey, take it easy. No rush because we're not riding Tour de France."

PONTIAC. Michigan - One year to the day before the 1994 World Cup begins, America's and ticipation and planning for the biggest-ever soccer finals are racing ahead beyond most everyone's expectations

Ticket sales are described as phonomenal, interest and awareness of the sport and the World Cup are growing rapidly, and even alesision-viewing figures have taken the organizers and FIFA, the sport's world governing body, by surprise, Backed by huge support for the U.S. Cup '93 tournament which has attracted more than 250,000 to six games and which was to end Sunday with Germany playing England here, and by overwhelm-ing demand for World Cup tickets, organizers had every reason to be jubilant.

The 24-nation World Cup begins June 17, 1994, in Chicago.

At a press conference in the Pontiac Silverdome to mark the one-Rheal Cormier, won his second year countdown, the World Cup chief executive, Alan Rothenberg, said: "It is clear the American pub-lic is lined up beautifully behind straight start, allowing nine hits and six runs in five-plus innings as the Cardinals won four straight for Pirates 6, Mets 2: Bob Walk

"Our first phases of ticket sales have been wildly oversubscribed and if we had an unlimited number we could have sold millions.

his 150th triumph, and Pittsburgh More than 650,000 of 3.6 million tickets have been sold so far in the ers Stadium. Jeff King drove in United States. About 65 percent of the total will be sold abroad.

> "No American with their eves and ears open will not know about the World Cup next year," predicted Rothenberg.

Rothenberg promised, more importantly for FIFA, that the World Cup would give birth to a professional soccer league in the United States in 1995.

About 30 percent of all cup profits will be used to support creation of a league that FIFA, in awarding the event to the United States, insisted must happen. It expects a business plan by December.

The organizers also outlined World Cup security measures.

"We feel privileged to have. World Cup soccer come to the United States," said Edgar Best, head of security for the cup. "We are not out to overpower people with security. We want this to be a very joyous event." Officials said files had been compiled on soccer hooligans the world: over, and about 20 were turned back at Boston's Logan Airport when they tried to attend a U.S. Cup game at Foxboro Stadium. Sepp Blatter, chief executive of FIFA, said he was opposed to putting up fences around the fields. "We do not like fences." Blatter said. "If you put people behind fences, they will act like animals."

Best said organizers also were wrestling with the problem of alcohol at the nine stadiums that will be used for the tournament. Many routinely sell beer.

Will Yanks Make Manhattan Home?

NEW YORK - George Steinbrenner, who talks from time to time about pulling his New York Yankees out of the Bronx, reportedly has looked at putting a new stadium in Manhattan, a few blocks from Madison Square Garden.

He also is supposed to be considering sites in every other borough of the city and in suburban Westchester County and New Jersey, all in the name of getting more fans to come to watch his team.

"I might not have a choice," Steinbrenner said in an interview with MSG network Tuesday night, when 30,000 turned out for a game with the Boston Red Sox, leaving about 27.000 seats empty. "For us to be drawing what we're drawing this year with the kind of team this is, is kind of ridiculous." Steinbrenner has said the combination of difficult parking and the perceived menace of the South Bronx stadium site was keeping fans from turning out to see a winning team. With a 38-29 record, the Yankees are in third place in the American League East.

The Daily News on Thursday quoted a source close to the owner as saying Steinbrenner had seen drawings for a 60.000-seat stadium that might be built at a rail vard west of the Madison Square Garden arena.

Other possible spots, sources said, are Van Cortlandt Park in the northern Bronx: Coney Island in Brooklyn; Staten Island; three Queens sites, including the neigh-borhood of Belmont Park race track; the New Jersey Meadowlands, and Yonkers, north of New York City. Governor Mario M. Cuomo pledged that the state would do whatever it could to help Mayor David N.

Dinkins persuade Steinbrenner to stay in the Bronx. If they fail, officials will look at other sites in the city and state, he said.

"If, despite our best efforts, he insists on moving, we simply cannot let the Yankees out of the state," Cuomo said. "The notion of Yankees in Jersey, or Yankees anywhere else, just doesn't work, It's repulsive to us."

Magic Says Jordan Ranks as the NBA's All-Time Best By Michael Wilbon five. He says, "M.J. I'm gonna talking about greatness by promotin "we," not as i lakers, but we the Laker is "We had many more

Buils one step away from a historic third consecutive National Basketball Association championship, there was much talk about winning at the highest level, about achieve-ment and standards of excellence almost never reached in sports. Fortunately, the man who knows more about championship-caliber performance than anyone in modern-day basketball, even more than Michael Jordan, was leading the discussion.

That man is, of course, Earvin

Magic) Johnson.
He is watching it all, watching Jordan and the Bulls prepare to do something he and the Lakers could not do, something Bird and the Ceitics could not do, something nobody has done since those prehistoric Celtics, who played at a time when Wilt was about the only play-er in the league who could shoot 50 percent for the season.

Magic had a shot at a threepeat once, in 1989. The Lakers had won 11 straight games and were waiting for the Pistons.

"As good a basketball as I ever hursday. But in Game 2 Magic pulled a hamstring. He tried to play again before the series was over, but was done. NBA careers are short. Even under optimm conditions, like playing for the Lakers in the 80s, you get one chance to threepeat. That was his. "Oh yeah. I knew it," he says now.

Did Magic sense that the Buils fully appreciated what they could do if they won Game 5 on Friday?
"Michael definitely does," he said. "His whole thing is Larry Bird and myself, accomplishing something we haven't. We call each other M.J. I say to him, 'M.J., I've got about grammatical correctness for a second and take substance over style, Magic can teach you more basketball in one two-hour telecast than you've learned all your life.

Havingcaptained the Lakersteam that lost to the Buils' farst title team, and having dissected and deserred the Bulls from courtside as a TV analyst the last two years, nobody can better put the Bulls in perspec-

"They're the smartest team in the league," he said. They have no competition when it comes to smarts. That's want they do, outsmart you. When you go to the NBA Finals, it's about, 'Who's going to play smart? because every-body's got about the same talent at that stage. It's, 'How do they play in the fourth quarter, with the game on the line?' Take New York in Game 5, the Knicks didn't deal with the pressure well. New York's thinking, 'Oh, I've got to go to the line!' Chang, clang, chang, Chicago doesn't put pressure on itself and they're so smart. That's why they Win the close games."

"They weathered a lot of storms," Johnson added. "Guys were upset at B.J. Armstrong because some of 'em wanted John Paxson. There was the staff between Horace Grant and Scottle Pippen. There was all the stuff with Michael, the casino gambling and this book. There were injuries to Bill Cartwright and other guys through the lar season. But anytime you can win three in a row, in any sport, you've achieved something special." Time and circumstance have made it so that the Lakers and five. He says, "M.I., I'm gonna talking about greatness he uses the pronoun "we," not as in we the lakers and Celtics. "We had many more weapons." he said, comparing both teams to the Bulls. "If I got in foul trouble or Larry got in foul trouble, we said 'Hey, you, come on in here and take up the slack."

"But they [the Bulls] play better defense. They create more steaks than both our teams combined. The East has changed everything. They've good with the defensive philosophy of cutting down another team's penetration, which is what they've done to Phoenix."

"They're the best half-court team in baskethall," he said. " And they throw the best cross-court pass in basketball. They swing the ball all the way over here and wind up with an open shot. Phoenix doesn't know enough to beat them. Next year, if they get back here . . . Many say Magic is the best player of all time. For ever and ever. There's the five championship rings and nine trips to the finals in 11 years, plus the way he made other players better than they had a right to be. But the case for Jordan being the greatest sounds better every day. With three straight titles, Jordan passes Bird. Does he pass Magac?

"There's always going to be a de-bate." Magic said. "I think that Mi-chael is the greatest to ever play because he does things we didn't even think about. If Larry and I scored two points, they were two points. If Michael scores two points they could be the greatest two points in the history of basketball. We can't even think about going down the lane like he did [Wednesday night]. He's just beautiful to watch. And the wonderful thing is the way he takes challenges. He's created this mon-Celtics seem as one. Especially this time of year. Even to Magic. When ster, now he has to maintain it."

Craig Parry, after "12 lean months," had a birdie putt on the seventh en route to a share of the lead.

For 3 in Lead, Baltusrol Is as 'Good as It Gets'

By Jaime Diaz New York Time: Service

SPRINGFIELD, New Jersey rol course was bent to the breaking as good as it gets." point in the 93d U.S. Open's first

On a windless, warm day that did nothing to thicken the relatively sparse rough bordering the fairways and greens, locy Sindelar, Scott Hoch and Craig Parry all shot four-under-par 66s to share the fust-round lead.

The leaders all played somewhat less than brilliantly. That fact supported the notion that the championship 72-hole scoring record will once again be broken at Baltusrol. While the assault on par was not as imposing on Thursday as the first-round 63s that Jack Nicklaus and Tom Weiskop! posted here in 1980 Open, it cut deeper, as a total of 18 players broke the par of 70 on the Lower Course. Trailing the leading three were Lee Janzen and Craig Stadler at 67, while a group of seven golfers inciuding Fred Couples, Corey Pavin and Raymond Floyd, came in at two-under 68.

Among other prominent players, Nicklaus, Nick Faldo, Payne Stewart, Tom Waison, Davis Love 3d and Tom Watson shot-even par 70s, while Paul Azinger, Nick Price, the PGA Champion, and Jeff Stu-man, the 1992 runnerup, had 71s. "It was as good as could possibly be expected for a U.S. Open championship," Sindelar said of the conditions. "This is the way I would set up an Open if I had my chance. I thought it was very playable and With its only defense the inherent just right. For a classic, tough, great difficulty of its design, the Balms-test of golf on a nice golf day, this is Sindelar, like Hoch a high-ball hitter, said that he drove the ball in the 5-inch-long primary rough sev-eral times, but always caught a lie good enough to get the ball on or near the green.

"I got away with a lot more than I gave up," said Sindelar. "I proba-bly shot about 70, maybe 69." Hoch was even more self-effac ing. His birdie-birdie finish on Baltusrol's closing par-5s made what he called a mediocre ballstriking round a jewel of a score. "My round today I compare to a duck," said Hoch. "On the surface he looks fine, like's moving right along, no problems at all. But under-neath, he's paddling like heck just to keep up. That's what I felt inside."

Parry has been playing poorly in recent weeks. But before the championship, he worked with swing coach David Leadbetter and rediscovered an ability to hit the ball right to left as well as his normal left to right shot.

"I've had a pretty lean 12 months since Augusta last year," said Parry, who led after three rounds in the 1992 Masters before fading to a 78 and a tie for 13th, "But I concentrate a little better in major championships than in normal tournaments. Today, the scoring conditions were perfect out there."

Russian Sets Triple-Jump Record MOSCOW (AP) — Yolanda Chen of Russia broke the women's triple jump world record with a leap of 14.97 meters (49 feet, 1½ inches) at the Russian track-and-field championship in Moscow on Friday.

The previous record of 14.95 meters was set by the Ukrainian Inessa Kravets at the same Locomotive Stadium on June 10, 1991.

Lemieux Wins 2d NHL MVP Award

TORONTO (AP) - Mario Lemieux, who returned to the Pittsburgh Penguins this season after missing a month for treatment for Hodgkin's disease, received three trophies Thursday night at the National Hockey League's annual awards ceremony.

Lemieux, 27, was named most valuable player, scoring champion and was given the Bill Masterton Trophy for dedication and sportsmanship. Lemeux also was MVP in 1988.

Other awards included: Doug Gilmour of Toronto, best defensive forward; Chris Chelios of Chicago, best defensemen, and teammate Ed Belfour, best goaltender. Pat Burns of Toronto was selected coach of the year and Teems Scianne of Winnipeg was the top rookie. For the first time since he entered the league in 1989, Wayne Gretzky of Los Angeles was not a finalist for an award.

China Assails U.S. Panel Over Games

BELIING (AP) — The Chinese Olympic Committee on Friday accused a U.S. House of Representatives subcommittee of "wanton interference" for opposing Beijing's bid to host the 2000 Olympic Games.

The subcommittee on international security, international organizations and human rights passed a resolution on June 10 opposing Beijing's Olympic bid because of China's human-rights record. The resolution is expected to be adopted by the House Foreign Affairs Committee. The Chinese Olympic Committee said in a statement carried by the official Xinhua news agency that the panel's opposition to China's bid "on the pretext of the so-called human-rights issue is a wanton interference with the just right of the Chinese people and tramples upon Olympic principles." It said the subcommittee was acting "out of their political prejudice against China."

Doubts on 5 Women Athletes' Genes

LONDON (Reuters) - Five women athletes at the 1992 Barcelona Olympics had male genes, researchers said on Friday. Spanish scientists reported in Britain's Lancet medical journal that a new technique used in Barcelona involved looking for two gene sequences specific to the Y chromosome, which identifies genetic males.

The sindy said five of 2,406 female athletes tested positive for both sequences and were asked to undergo a full medical examination. One refused and four others had abnormalities in body characteristics. It was not known whether the women were allowed to take part in the Games. "Just having male genetic material discovered doesn't mean you are a male," said Malcolm Brown, a British team doctor in Barcelona. "All this test does is cause upset to young women, who are suddenly left doubting their own sexuality because of a false result. It is a waste of time."

Some lawyers are hugely successful writers, and I intend to cash in on this. I am not technically, a lawyer, but I did watch numerous episodes of "Perry Mason," and on one occasion, when I got a traffic ticket, I represented myself in court, successfully pleading "nolo contendere" (Latin, meaning "Can I pay by check?"). So I felt well qualified to write the following blockbuster legal thriller and possible movie screenplay:

CHAPTER ONE

The woman walked into my office, and I instantly recognized her as Clarissa Fromage, charged with murdering her late husband, wealthy industrial polluter A. Cranston (Bud) Fromage, whose death was originally reported as a heart attack, but later ruled a homicide when sophisticated laboratory tests showed that his head had been cut off.

"So," she said, and I could tell by the way she spoke the word that it had quotation marks around it. "You're a young Southern lawyer resembling a John Grisham protagonist as much as possible without violating the copyright laws."

England's Garden Club of the Air

By William E. Schmidt

WOODBURY, England — The first question came from Sheila Spencer, a local woman: Could the panel suggest something besides a small shrub she might try growing over an old cesspit on her lawn? It had just swallowed her viburnum tinus.

On the stage of the Woodbury village hall, hunched behind a long table covered in green baize and draped in thick cables, the four touring panelists from British Broadcasting Corp.'s "Gardeners' Question Time," Britain's longest running radio program, leaned into their microphones and mulled the options.

Should Spencer fill the old cesspit with compacted layers of dirt and gravel, or should she just go ahead and plant a larger tree, perhaps a fir? Or, better yet, would it be smarter to give up entirely and cover the area with a large planter, perhaps something elevated on a tapered concrete plinth?

For the 150 or so village people pinched inside the narrow hall for the broadcast, which since 1947 has been taped weekly from a different town or village somewhere in Britain, heads followed each volley in the discussion like eager spectators at a tennis match.

This was, after all, the real stuff, the kind of gritty, down-to-earth, hard-core gardening give and take that the people of this Devon willage had been waiting to hear, live and in person, since 1976, when the local garden club first joined the line of towns and counties waiting for the chance to do "Gardeners' Question Time."

For nearly 46 years, "Gardeners' Question Time" has been a fixture on the BBC's weekly schedule, and ritual listening for millions of Britons, people like Alan Foster, the president of the Woodbury Garden Club, who says he and his wife build their Sunday afternoons around the 2 P. M. broadcast.

"Wouldn't think of missing it," said Foster, who couldn't quite believe that the faceless personalities of his favorite program were sitting there in the kitchen of the village hall, eating cheese and pickle sandwiches, and drinking tea, as they prepared for the taping.
The most prominent of these is Clay Jones, the affable Welshman who has been a member of the panel for 17 years and whose lilting baritone may be one of the most instantly recognizable voices in Britain.

It is Jones who moderates the discussion, keeping the flow going among the three other panelists. He began this broadcast with his signature introduction, welcoming listeners to join him from Woodbury in southwestern England, "where the climate is soft and the soil very variable but generally fertile, of a light nature on a clay subsoil."

Then, over the next two hours, in the course of about 15 questions, Jones and his colleagues dazzled the audience, adroitly covering everything from the propagation of a Gloriosa lily to the wintering-over capabilities of corylopsis Willmottiae, a flowering shrub; sagely diagnosing a puny-looking sprig of apple tree tendered for examination by a worried woman from the audience "This tree is badly in need of feeding," Jones advised sternly), and even quibbled, if only a ittle, among themselves ("I feel I've been pruned off in my prime," complained Stefan Buczacki, not all together seriously, after another panelist interrupted him).

The program's enduring popularity is a direct measure of the British affection for gardens and gardening, a point that had been driven home late in May, when record crowds turned out for the Chelsea Flower Show, the largest and most prestigious of Britain's gar-

The show, a fixture in the spring season, attracts everyone from the prime minister to members of the royal family, and this year coincided with the announcement that Middlesex University, in far suburban London, was offering Britain's first college-level degree in gardening and garden design. Even the editorial writers at The Times of London were moved to comment, approvingly, that gardening, "like cricket and love sonnets," is something at which the British excel, although they urged the university not to get too entangled in the theoretical.

It was the philosopher Bertrand Russell, The Times recalled, who said he concluded that happiness was possible for mankind only after talking to his gardener, a point with which Jones would be quick to agree. The popularity of "Gardeners' Question Time," he said, went beyond flowers and vegetables; here was a show that offered listeners "a nice half-hour of sanity among all the talk about Northern Ireland and Bosnia."

To ensure a good balance of subjects, the questions for the taping are screened in advance and then shared among the panel mem-bers. But they also take some questions cold from the audience.

Among the panelists, one favorite question came from a man who wanted to know how he could best serve his garden when he died: Would it better for his body to be buried in the garden, or just have his cremated ashes scattered among the delphinium. The answer, said Buczacki, is clear: "His garden would be much happier with all of him."

Other questions sometimes appear to have not been carefully thought out. During one show, for example, someone asked why the apple pips he had planted had grown into a

"Such moments require great tact," said Buczacki, a dapper man who favors bow ties and has been a member of the panel since 1982. "You cannot say, because you obviously planted plum pips."
